Christie Cabanne made an excellent job of the direction. In only one or two places does the action drag, or is it possible to see where a more modern technique practised today would have treated certain episodes a little differently—speeding them up, perhaps, or deftly passing them by.

"Reckless Youth"

EVEN though this Cosmo Hamilton story had revealed a new angle on life instead of proving a trite and muchly-fictionalized tale, the general results would have been the same.

Several Elaine Hammersteins could not have saved the production from wreckage at the hands of the director. The handling is very unconvincing. Cullen Landis supported Miss Hammerstein, giving a deadly dull performance.

"Reckless Youth" is another astonishing proof of the producer's fondness for printer's ink, regardless of the extreme age of plots, or the absurdity of story argument.

W. W.

"The Kingdom Within"

HAD we the simple minds that some producers think we have, "The Kingdom Within" would teach us the gentle lesson that Love, the almighty conquerer all, yea all. But uninformed as we are we have lived to learn that it takes more than an open heart and a smile to chase the wolf from the door.

Victor Schertzinger has set Kenneth

Marion Feducha, a child actress, shows talent and personality in the small role given her.

Clarke's story to action. His direction shows understanding of the story and knowledge of his characters.

Kenneth B. Clarke was caught in the tide of "faith healing" stories and so his story is not without its miracles and things.

However, the subject was well handled when it was adapted to the screen. The story deals with broken hearts and distorted minds with one physical healing for good measure.

Photography was excellent but it could not have been very bad considering the scenery in the big tree country where the picture was filmed.

Gaston Glass triumphed throughout. It is true that the author made the part sympathetic, and the director guided this juvenile in his characterization of the lame boy, but only Gaston Glass could have put the appeal and personality into the role. He made himself over to fit the part.

Pauline Starke has a great deal of melodramatic, with only a touch of emotional action. But she does it well and we would like to have seen more of her work.

Russell Simpson plays a character entirely familiar to himself and audiences. But there is conviction in his interpretation of the stern old fellow whom hate has made her slave.

Hallam Cooley and Ernest Torrence fill out the cast with remarkably good work.

R. W.

"The Siren Call"

ONCE Dorothy Dalton was starred in a "Yukon" picture and made a splurge in the part, so Lasky tried doing it over again. With a different story of course, that is—a different author wrote the story. "The Siren Call," written by J. E. Nash and adapted by him with the help of Philip Hurn is a tale of Alaska. And like others, opens with a verse from Service, drags its characters through fire, water and murders, only to foil the villain and save the heroine.

It is surprising to see Irvin Willat's name on the alibi sheet as director. The direction is jerky and scenes not well connected.

Dorothy Dalton does not do her best work here. She acts stagey and forced. Of course it is not her fault that she has impossible situations to work through, but she could have played the part with more sincerity and care.

David Powell has a small part with a big fight. He does both well.

Mitchell Lewis, the heavy, is not a pleasant character to put into an already bad picture. However, he brings real acting to us and we can't have a good actor in a good part all in one shot.

Edward Brady, Will Walling, Leigh Wyant, Lucien Littlefield and George Williams all do good work, but a great deal of it is lost in the shadow of the star.

Camera work is average.

R. W.

"Don't Shoot"

THERE must be a great shortage of original stories when a company like Universal has to use a story ordinary in plot, over again, after a lapse of three years. That is what they have done with "Come Through." Perhaps the first time this picture was made it looked too good to them, so they changed the title to "Don't Shoot," to make it more puzzling and the scenes that weren't duplicated from the original were far below it.

Jack Conway directed this repeater. The first reel looked promising, then Conway weakened. Or else he turned the last four reels over to his cameraman. Camera work was spasmodic. The exteriors were beautiful but interiors were badly lighted and filmed.

George Hively, in writing the script, lost a great deal of the mystery and suspense of "Come Through."

Edna Murphy, one of the newer faces on the screen, is very graceful and pretty. She played her role without trying to put any frills on it. The result was pleasing.

Herbert Rawlinson doesn't deviate from the stereotyped hero. His acting hasn't varied since establishing himself as a screen idol, nor does it here.

Universal will do better hereafter to take a chance on an original story. In saving a few dollars on a story they have lost many trying to hand the public old stuff.

Where to Find People You Know

Ralph Graves is leading man to Trixie Friganza in his production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Mind Over Motor."

Ruth Stonehouse has been signed by Premium Pictures Corporation to star in three features to be produced in Portland, Ore.

Virginia Caldwell, the latest acquisition to the cast of Marshall Neilan's "Stranger's Banquet," is the wife of Wesley Ruggles, the director. Miss Caldwell will portray the part of Olive Stockton.

Phyllis Haver has been engaged to play opposite Buster Keaton in his forthcoming comedy which he is to produce under the Joseph M. Schenck banner for release through Associated First National. It will take six weeks to complete. Eddie Cline, as usual, is directing.

Enid Bennett, the former Thos. H. Ince screen star, who has just ended an engagement as leading woman with Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," has one of the important role-assignments in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms."

Edith Johnson, William McCall, Charles Dudley and James Farley will be listed in the cast for William Duncan's production which has just gone under way.

Allan Dwan, who has just finished directing "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," is to direct Rudolph Valentino in "The Spanish Cavalier," based on the opera, "Maritana."

Arthur Smith is assisting Scott Darling at Universal.

Frank Kingsley is acting as co-director with Chuck Reisner at the Hallroom Boys studios. Walter Stevens is acting in the capacity of assistant.

Harry Russell, thanked H. C. Raymaker for the two consecutive days that he worked in his picture at the Fox studios. "You know," chirped Harry, "one must be thankful for a half of a loaf these days if he can't get a whole one to fill his larder."

Frederick Peters finished with J. G. Blystone and moved over to the Hollywood studios where he worked for Arthur Trimble.

Frank Borzage is working at the Hollywood studios where he is making "The Pride of Palomar."

Bert Bracken seems to be getting lined up to start another feature at the Hollywood studios.

George Marshall is being talked of as the man to direct the next Ruth Roland serial.

Reggie Morris is over at Catalina taking life easy and at the same time lining up some new stories for some of the funsters that he expects to be directing very shortly.

Margaret Cullington is working in the Louis Sargent comedy out at the Big U in the role of the mother of Lucile Rickson.

Fred Kelsey is to play a high Spanish official in Johnnie Walker's new picture, "Captain Fly-by-Night."

Clarke Irvine, publicity man, is playing a Spanish soldier with Johnnie Walker in his initial R-C picture, "Captain Fly-by-Night."

Hugh Saxon, for the first time in months, has taken a fling at working in a comedy, casting his lot in the Scott Darling picture out at the Universal studios.

Lillian Rich has been engaged by Universal again for a leading role.

Lloyd Ingraham is soon to start another picture. In the cast will be Betty Francisco, Eddie Hearn, Lottie Williams, John Stepping, Harry Depp, Lincoln Steadman, Lillian Lawrence and Bert Hadley. The latter just returned from a stage tour with Robert McKim. Just where the Ingraham picture will be made isn't at all decided, though it is talked of favoring the R-C lot.

Billy De Vault is working for Harry Polard as a butler.

Jack Conway is to direct Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick in a drama that calls for a trip to Arizona. Tom Wilson has been cast for a part.

C. B. Steele is acting the role of a butler with the side-burns and everything for Tod Browning in his picture that he is making with Priscilla Dean.

Lucile Pinzon is doing a maid for Scott Darling at Universal City in one of his comedies.

William Sistrom is getting ready to leave these parts for the east.

Chuck Reisner is getting ready to direct his son, Dinky, in a series of comedies at the Hallroom Boys studios.

Sunshine Hart is playing in her tenth picture in the Jack White comedies at the United studios. She is in her third week of a two-reel comedy in which she plays the part of a French landlady.

Hobart Bosworth, screen and stage star, is to appear in Marshall Neilan's new production, "The Strangers' Banquet."

Ernest Torrence does a remarkable piece of work as a feeble-minded clown in "Singed Wings," now under production at Lasky studios.

Alfred E. Green will go to New York after completing his picture with Thomas Meighan.

Robert Sherwood played in the Louis Sargent comedy at Universal.

Blanche Payson is working for Chuck Reisner, playing the mother of little Dinky, son of the director.

George Walsh returned from a personal tour of the leading theatres throughout the United States and is ready to start working out this way once more.

Harry Weil, assistant to Frank Lloyd, is idle for the first time in many moons. The latter just completed Norma Talmadge's last picture for the Joseph Schenck productions. Since Lloyd intends to take a much needed rest, Harry figures it a good idea to make hay while the sun shines—hence his looking about for another boss.

Gordon Mullen is playing a very difficult character in "Thelma"—that of a woman who's screen title answers to "Lovissa."

P. A. Powers' arrival in the Southland has brought out quite a number of innovations on the R-C lot. The empty fences are being painted announcing what productions are now being made under their banner.

Bob Daily is working with his pal, King Baggott. The pair have been chums for years on the legitimate stage and are inseparable out at Universal City.

Mickey McBan, the little three-and-a-half year old aquatic marvel, has been signed for three pictures starring Zasu Pitts at the Cosmosart studios. Philip Hubbard will direct.

Frank Messenger is assisting Harry Polard in producing the "Leather Pushers" series at Universal.

Robert Hill is up north making some lumberjack stories for the Universal and expects to be gone some time.

Sam Rantore has cast his lot with the Richard Thomas productions, coming here from Santa Ana where he has been in business.

Frank Coleman returned from Big Bear where he was enjoying a much needed rest. He is ready to start working.

Nate Watt has had a very good offer from Oklahoma to go there and direct a feature.

Pickups By The Staff

CAMERAMEN FIGHT DEATH IN OCEAN

Arthur Edeson, chief cameraman for Douglas Fairbanks, and his assistant, Richard Holohan, fought a five-hour battle against death in a wind-lashed sea off the Southern California coast this week when they went to Abalone Point, nine miles below Balboa, Calif., to retake a scene for Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood."

Wind and tide were so high that the boat was nearly swamped in going through the surf. An improvised signal of distress was raised, and despite the danger of going ashore, the pilot of the launch came in and rescued the four. The $3000 worth of camera equipment was badly damaged and the film they had taken on the beach was spoiled by salt water. One of the boatmen collapsed after the rescue, and Edeson and Holohan spent a day recuperating from the harrowing experience.

Prizma Colored Pictures, which company has headquarters in New York, has established west coast offices at the Fine Arts studios.

The newly formed Trimble Productions, starring little Arthur Trimble, is being exploited by Eddie Granneman, former newspaper man and director of publicity for the National studios.

Edward Sloman recently acquired a portable projection machine and with its use has staged many previews of his production, "Blind Justice," at his home on South Hobart boulevard.

E. F. Squadrilli and Jacques D'Auray of the Louvre Art Gallery, have organized a research and rental department for the use of motion picture producers. This will aid in eliminating technical inaccuracies from future productions.

Al St. John has finished another of his fun-films at the Fox studios.

Tod Browning had the following players in a single set the other day, all dressed in evening clothes and gowns, and credit is due the casting offices of Fred Datig and his able assistant, Joe Egli, for lining up such a clean cut and classily dressed group: Rolin Arrenz, Geo. Bastin, George Carpenter, Oliver Cross, Graydon Fox, Floyd Goodman, Dick Gordon, Webster Le Grange, Lars Landers, F. S. Liscomb, Andrew Lyle, Chas. Meakin, Hamilton Morse, C. M. O'Dell, John Orloff, John Reidy, H. Reineque, Gordon Sackville, Edgar Sherrod, Maj. Talbott, Doc Bytell, F. F. Guenste, Clyde McAttee, Arthur Millette, Dorothy Cleveland, Lottie De Vault, Nell Foltz, Jessie Gadsden, Jean Gordon, Julia Griffith, Adalaide Hallcock, Jessie Heathman, Annette Kusse, Stella Martin, Caroline Putney, Myrtle Rishell, Alice H. Smith, Betty Scrack and Gertrude Barrows.

This hasn't anything to do with the great cast that usually surrounds such a great artist as Priscilla Dean has proven herself in all Universal features. Leo McCarey is the assistant director on the job, as has been his lot in past pictures that Director Browning has been producing on the Big U lot.

A three-act play titled "The Sins of Hollywood," opening at the Orpheum house in Detroit last week, surprised reviewers there by defending the character of motion picture people and by making fun of professional reformers.

Wade Boteler is working in the Hoot Gibson picture out at the Big U under the direction of Nat Ross, with Dave Brandman as assistant director.

She makes funny faces for the camera, but when she is off stage Dorothy Vernon sings lullabys to her grand-daughter Barbara Dorothy Vernon. Yes, Barbara's daddy is Bobby Vernon.

MUSIC FOR ROBIN HOOD NOW NEARING COMPLETION

The original musical score being prepared for "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," by Dr. Boris Dunev, celebrated pianist and composer, is rapidly nearing completion. For the past five weeks Dr. Dunev has been working at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio, composing the music as the picture is being titled and cut. The score will be a silent opera on a symphonic basis.

The Musical Score for Elmer Clifton's production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," now being designed by Henry F. Gilbert, noted American composer—will contain original themes by Mr. Gilbert, as well as original arrangements of sea chanteys and excerpts from the works of the world's best composers.

Heinrich Hammer, for 17 years conductor of the symphony orchestra of Washington, D. C., is in Los Angeles, preparing the musical score for Congressman Milford W. Howard's southern drama, "The Bishop of the Ozarks."

Eric Von Stroheim visited the Reginald Denny set while Director Pollard was handling big mob sets. The reason he dropped in was nothing more or less than to look the scenes over.

Alexander Pantages is sending the former vaudeville success, "Twenty Minutes in Chinatown," over the circuit again. The cast includes some well-known picture people: Harold Holland, Herbert Sears, William Carroll, Fred Gambold, Lorrain Willie, Lillian George, Fred Howard. The act will open at the local Pantages in the very near future.

The next Halperin production, "Tea—With a Kick," is scheduled to be a synchronization of different kinds of kicks. Ranging from the family mule's elevators to feminine diminutive "kicks" and back again to the liquid kind, the picture promises to be "different." The story is by Victor Hugo Halperin.

Ebba Mona is making quite a reputation for herself putting on girl reviews for the different directors and studios. She furnished the girls for Al St. John Co., Herman C. Raymaker, Howard Mitchell and others all on the Fox lot, which speaks for itself.

Clyde McAttee and Jack Underhill are running a race to see who has played the most butler parts for Director Browning. To date Clyde has 114 such parts to his credit and Jack just about even-Stephen.

Walter Wilkinson just completed working in a circus story at the Hal E. Roach studios. Walter when asked how he liked working in a circus, said, "Great, especially when I know that I am being paid to have some fun," that's what I call having an eye for business when a mere child will pass out such inside information.

Jack Roberts, who years ago refereed fights and handled fighters, handled the Reginald Denny-Al Norton scrap at the Big U, while Harry Burns handled the other match in which Denney fought Kid Whirlwind, playing the role of Kid Jackson. Harry Pollard directed the scenes.

Fifi Edwards, a cunning lassie, is working with Neal Hart in his present picture being made out at the Big U.

Gareth Hughes is working in the George Fitzmaurice story at Lasky's in which Betty Compson and Bert Lytell have the stellar roles, which makes the cast one of the strongest lineups in many a day in such a subject.

"Forget-Me-Not," running at one of Loew's houses in New York, was shown at a special performance for 400 blind men and women last week. Figured cards or "subtitles" were held in the hands of the blind ones, while a speaker described the screen action.

Neeley Edwards is reducing these days and his fat partner, Bert Roach, stands around with both ears wide open, listening for some information from Neely as to what is aiding him to reduce his surplus weight. And up to going to press he is still on the waiting line for some inside info.

Chatter of Southland Folks - By.... Harry Burns

Hap H. Ward and his dog Camisole, made a personal appearance the other night at the Glendale theater, where their picture that both appear in "Nice and Simple," was given a preview, and met with success. Billy Armstrong, Patrica Magill, George Spear, Mrs. Sherrat, Miss Comport and others, shared honors with Hap H. Ward and the clever canine.

Vin Moore is still waiting for Col. Selig, to line up contracts on his initial efforts with Mary, that clever chimpanzee, and the Selig Zoo animals.

Jessie Hebbard walked the very ground as a child where 22 years later she played the mother of Marjorie Daw in "The Pride of Palomar," now being directed by Frank Borzage. She says she got quite a kick out of trodding the very soil on location that the scenes were photographed on, it brought back memories of happy childhood.

Francis Carpenter's mother bought a house and lot at Selma and McCadden Place that will keep the youngster from worrying for the rest of the days. There are four flats in the one they live in, and rent out the others, and the little fellow is waiting to get started in something as worth while as he did in "Jack In the Bean Stalk," when he played the little Prince who was in love with the Princess, who by the way, is to make her own pictures shortly, her name being Virginia Lee Corbin. A wise manager would sign up Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin for a series of pictures and make capital out of their efforts in the Fox kiddie productions that they worked in as co-stars.

Forrest Stanley and Marjorie Daw are being aided by Alfred Allen, Jessie Hebbard and an excellent cast to put over "The Pride of Palomar," being filmed at the Hollywood studios, which Frank Borzage is directing. William Siström, for years manager of the Big U studios, is looking after the Cosmopolitan Productions interests here.

Coy Watson is working as prop man with the Hunt Stromberg Co., while Coy, Jr., is taking things easy at home. Papa is working, so why should he worry about filling the family larder right now when vacation time is on.

Dan Crimmons was hiding behind a makeup at the Metro studios, but he couldn't fool yours truly, for I have known Daniel since he entered the lions den at the old Horsley studios at Washington and Main streets.

Lillian Leighton was pleased with the way "Lights of the Desert" got over at Loew's theater, for she played a very good part and felt that her part in the play was well appreciated from compliments and comments she heard about her while the picture was being screened.

Vera Alden no more than finishes in one place than she seems to fall right in to another chance to disport her acting ability, her latest bit of good fortune came when she happened on the Paton set and was told to hurry in a makeup and go to work.

James Whipple acted as chairman of the last meeting, as President Harry Burns was busily engaged that evening on a matter of importance pertaining to producing pictures.

George Webster is aiding Lynn Reynolds in keeping Tom Mix in good humor and inject life and animation in some of the Arabs that are disporting their acting wares in their picture now in the making at the Fox studios.

Gordon Hollingshead is learning everything that he can about oil wells for Ed Kennedy, whom he is assisting, is doing a comedy with Chester Conklin around such locations.

John Meighan is in a quandry. He has been playing so many good parts in pictures of late that he is on the verge of giving up assisting directors and sticking to the acting. Better leave well enough alone, John—remain a good assistant.

Joe McDonough is initiating Trixie Friganza into the movies, aiding Ward Lascelle, who is directing her at the U. The trio seem to be getting on splendidly. But how does "Trixie" like our silent stage? Hope she does, for she is another national character that is worth while having in our midst.

Everett Sullivan must like to be near his brother, Jack, who with Eddie Sowders is helping Eric Von Stroheim get ready to shoot "The Merry Go Around," his next super-feature. Everett was caught acting the role of a policeman in the prize fight scenes that revealed Reginald Denny and Al Norton doing a knock down and drag out affair. Who can tell but Everett may help friend brother when they start shooting the Stroheim subject.

Harold G. Oliver, the fellow who originated the Holland Dutch bakeries that one sees a sprinkling of all about town, the odd looking Willat studios at Culver City and the Montgomery Inn in Hollywood, is the art director of the Frank Borzage company at the Hollywood studios, and when not designing sets for studios he supplies the demands of the different corporations who like his unique buildings that sprang to prominence over night when he first struck upon the idea.

Mr. Oliver is going to enlighten Camera-readers in an interesting article in the very near future about what are the duties and possibilities of an art director and designer of architecture, which has caused the designers of the Southland to look to filmland for new ideas along these lines.

Dinky is the latest find in kid row of acting that has been promoted to stardom, the little tot is the son of Chuck Keisner, who is directing him in a comedy subject that deals with apartment house and hotels refusing to house animals or kiddies, and from one on the inside I gather that all the kiddies from Jackie Coogan on down want to watch Dinky, for he will soon be heard from.

Mrs. R. B. McKenzie just completed a part with the Sanford productions, and has some other good work coming up.

Jack Mintz has joined the Hunt Stromberg forces as gag man, aiding Hughey Fay, who is directing Bull Montana, that handsome(?) leading man of the movies, who loves to trade catch-as-catch-can holds for good American dollars with all comers.

After completing the Cosmopolitan production, H. G. O. intends to return to the Florence Vidor corporation in a like capacity and can be looked to give us something new in the technical line.

Billy Rhodes makes a cute looking Hollander in the present picture that Joe Rock is making at the Universal. There is Mortimer Peebles and John Smith looking after the funsters actions in the picture while Leon Lee is the boss of the situation and not forgetting Joe Rock's brother, Maury, who is lending a helping hand.

Junior Allen did his bit of acting in the Lester Cueno feature that is being directed by Henry McCarty at the Fine Arts studios.

F. G. Becker, who is starting a series of pictures which will feature Arthur Trimble, has a bad idea of what the public wants along these lines, and will soon reveal some original ideas in his subjects which will deal with the medieval periods costume plays, especially with kiddies, as the stars have always had a great appeal to the theatergoers and Becker's efforts will be watched with interest.

L. A. Moran, who hails from Monrovia, is going to start a series of kiddie comedies featuring his own child, and is casting about for a staff that will make up his roster of co-workers when he starts the ball a rolling.

Tote Du Crow is playing in the "Pride of Palomar," which Frank Borzage is directing at the Hollywood studios for the Cosmopolitan Productions of New York City.

Lillian Nicholson went stark mad the other day, and those about her were pleased with her actions, especially director Maurice Tourneur, who was in charge of the situation. It pays to go crazy some times, especially when they pay as well as Lillian was when her days work was ended at the Goldwyn studios.

Frank Roderick is aiding Harry Kerr in the casting offices of the Metro studios. Every one that used to come to the Big U and seek work in the Datig offices up to a short while back, remember Frank, so give him the once-over at his new place of business and renew old acquaintances.

Curt Rehfeldt, since Rex Ingram has gone East, has been turning down offers to leave the Metro studios, some have been very tempting, but, Joseph Engle just wouldn't listen to such a thing, for he has some future plans for Curt and stay he will with that organization, the only reason he didn't go East with Director Ingram was that he has his home and family here, and didn't care to leave.

BROTHERLY LOVE

One of the "gentlemen of the press," who is given to damning some of his brethren by praise so faint that it does not even whisper, has his habitat in New York, that sea-going city which refused to can Independence Day after Volstead stepped on the hose.

There are many writers who are similarly afflicted as the scribe we mention, but he writes for a most prominent publication. Therefore it is fitting that we hold this person up as a horrible example, and proceed to hit him in the nose, more in sorrow than in anger, as a terrible example to other offenders.

But first we must admit that Robert Sherwood is a mighty fine fellow and a wit of parts. He can bite off enough in one sentence to provide good chewing for a couple of hours, if the old bean holds out. Robert has a kind heart and would not unwittingly destroy anything which is good. For example, he visited our own fair city recently and, although he has departed, Hollywood still is intact.

We presume that Sherwood goes to the pictures because he writes about them regularly. He is a critic. But he is the kind of critic who waves a wicked tommyhawk, letting the chips fall where they may. You can go so far as to purchase Robert a full meal, but he still will flatten you out at the appearance of your next picture, if it has the pip.

Now, returning to our subject anent crimes against scenario and continuity writers, it must be explained that numerous critics of the film seem unaware that such persons exist in and around filmdom. If they are so aware, they must have become mixed on the classification thing.

Consequently, the thousand and one fleeting reviews proceed to make Mr. Director the almighty himself so far as the successful production is concerned. The man with the megaphone is praised because of discrimination in selection of the story itself, or the theme. He is tossed exotics because of the development, the smoothness and the expansion of the story.

We have even seen the director praised for the genius of the actor himself, to say nothing of the clever subtitles.

We would not go so far as to say that Bre'er Sherwood commits the most stupid blunders as herein set forth, but he sure is a bear along general lines of the indictment.

Perhaps his latest criticism is the most striking as to misplaced credit. He cheers the "unexpected skill" of a director for handling an almost impossible story. He speaks of the grace with which two themes "melt together and form a coherent whole," et cetera.

But, on the face of the review itself, the credit should go to the continuity.

In case of the production in question, the organization behind it always hands the director a "director proof" manuscript. The continuities there are torn down and rebuilt to the nth degree, and the director then "follows his script."

But thousands of other reviews have incorporated the same false credits. It is merely history repeating itself.

Therefore, the wailful cry emanating from continuity writers who, not only are ignored in reviews, but see the fruits of their perspiring brows served up on the other fellow's dish.

While angels weep.

Now, having thoroughly reformed the Sherwood clan, may we add a word of advice. Do not, pray, dash right into the good work or righting this great wrong too recklessly.

Ease the blow, as it were. Proceed gently. Ease it to your brethren of the film.

Consider, ah consider, we earnestly beseech you, what might happen should one of you begin his review thusly:

"The author deserves high praise for this story, while the continuity writer must share in the honors of the successful production liberally."

We shudder to think of the ensuing mortality!

W. E. W.

"A rose by any other name cannot possibly smell as sweet," said the producer, as he hugged the punk fiction story, and kicked the blooming original in the face. He probably meant, "smell the same."

His Epitaph

WHEN the boss, the manager, producer, star, technical man, boss carpenter, location man and "props" got done with his story, they handed the cover to the director, who completely ruined it.

You may spend a round Million advertising a brand, but still the manufacturer will be no greater than his product.

Box-office receipts of motion-picture houses fell off to the tune of $24,000,000 in 1921. A portion of this neat loss, we presume, was the result of saving in salaries of reading staffs.

A Rum Go

BLUEMONA has been cleaning house again. They have seized several still cameras, burned three copies of "The Port of Missing Men," confiscated a punching bag, arrester Barney Sherry, and now threaten to pinch anyone who is so lacking in shame as to tell the naked truth.

Air Holes—Danger!

Look around at the screen, fills the average writer with foreboding for more than one reason. Are the slips and flat places evident in the pictures he sees, defects which may be found in his own stories?

Almost all of us can cheer up.

They are.

In these days, when really good stories should be peddled by the shot-gun crew, one cannot afford to leave many openings in his scenario for the studios to hurl the bomb into.

Naturally the writer, far from the maddening film throng, will ask at once, why these apertures are allowed in productions upon the screen, if they constitute high crime.

That is an easy one.

Studios which put on these defectives framed in their own walled city, will turn yours down in righteous wrath, if your goods are damaged equally.

They may do it, but you are going to get potted if you try it.

Therefore, as the good story has to be a mighty fine marathoner in order to land a resting place, it should be doctored, then fattened up, before it runs the gauntlet.

You cannot send out really big stories, with air holes in them, and get anywhere. Studios may flounder and cover up yawning gaps, such, for example, as appear in "Monte Cristo," but the outsider must bridge his own chasms.

And don't write any "Monte Cristos" either. When you can strip a production of its magnificent sets and remarkable acting of a single star and have nothing left, you begin to get the answer to the oft-repeated query, "What's the matter with the movies?"

Therefore, after you have captured one fine, fat, original plot, be careful of the development. Have it travel steadily, but without injurious jumps. To leave out such gaps is better than plugging them up afterwards, just as the story which is told without a lapse of time is preferable to the scenario which has lapses of time.

Remember—air holes are essential only in cheese.

FRANK WOOD SAYS:

All the world's a stage, and all the people in it are writing photoplays.

THIS SETTLES IT

Why did they play "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" in only five reels?

And has Hays been hired to inspect or respect? What do you suspect?

Not only are drinking scenes taboo in sensitive censorship states, but you can't even show a chaser.

More Chatter

S. A. Franklin, when approached the other day, hadn't decided as to what his future plans are to be, but, since talking to him I learn from pretty good authority that the Warner Bros. and Harry Rapf interests have him on the verge of putting his John Henry Hancock to a contract to make "Brass" and "Main Street." Sounds good for all parties concerned.

Harry Pringle is working on the Fox lot for Director Len Reynolds in the Tom Mix picture. Doing an Arabian beggar, hope they fill the cup to the brim with all sorts of shekels, Harry.

Bobby Vernon worked until the wee hours of the morning the other night with Al E. Christie directing. It's Robert's first efforts along these lines in many a day. Ordinarily he doesn't work after dark. Not that he wouldn't if he had to, but Director Christie doesn't believe in working evenings unless he or the other directors actually have to keep up with the release dates.

Kid Wagner had his hair shaved so he could look tough in the Leather Pusher series being made by Harry Pollard for the Universal with Reginald Denny as the star. Outside of business the Kid isn't at all rough, if you please.

George Allen worked for Director Chas. Maigne at the Lasky studio doing one of those nice genteel boys who would just as soon take your wallet as smile at you.

Arthur Mackley, when he isn't working, loves to tell his associate players some stories. His category of puns range from the days of Edwin Booth to the present stage. Ask and ye shall receive when you see Arthur.

Contemporary Criticisms

"THE YOUNG DIANA" (Paramount)

"This story written by Marie Corelli may be classified as a spectacular romance. The producers have been successful in transferring from the original some of the author's well known mystery, vision and imagination."

"Joseph Urban designed the settings for the 'Young Diana,' which assures the fact that the feature will appeal to the eye attuned to the artistically bizarre."

"The cast in support of the notably attractive star do excellent work, particularly Pedro de Cordoba, in his characterization of the weird doctor, and Maclyn Arbuckle as the social climbing father. The lighting and photography are an asset to the pictorial appeal of the picture."

"The story . . . has been made with all the assistance of fine settings and skillful effects."

"Marion Davies does some very good acting, particularly as the spinster. She has the courage to look unattractive and her performance is nicely keyed up to the character."

"The scene in the laboratory is remarkable and the photography fine."

—Morning Telegraph.

"Brilliantly directed by two master directors, the results attained are evidence of the skill and to attention to detail rarely seen. A picture directed by Albert Capellani or Robert G. Vignola cannot well fail of being good, and under the guidance of these two 'The Young Diana' is a notable production."

"Richard Cleeve and Gypsy O'Brien are more than acceptable as the young lover and the other woman."

"As no Marion Davies production would be such without wonderful gowns they are here in profusion. In strong contrast with her gorgeous gowns is her appearance as the old maid, drab and somber, and it is hard to realize that the harsh features, drooping form and unlovely hair are those of Miss Davies."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"The directors have done some very good work in handling a small but effective cast, but they have allowed a little overacting on the part of the star and have also allowed her to divert the attention from the story to her many curious gowns. The settings are accredited to Joseph Urban, and he has secured some interesting effects, but they neither suit the story nor the characters, and for the most part they look the paper and compboard that they are made of."

—Film Daily.

"THE HANDS OF NARA" (Commonwealth-Metro)

"Great prospects were entertained for this rather sensational story by Richard Washburn Child. Transferred to the screen something seems to have gone amiss. Either the scenario writer or the director has been guilty of the error of omission of not balancing the various episodes properly. Without exception each one of them is dragged out quite unmercifully. They are talky and walky. The story lacks unity."

"The direction appears to be a little lax. Clara Kimball Young, Eliot Dexter, Edwin Stevens, and, in fact, the entire cast, are capable of better work"

—Motion Picture News.

"At the outset the picture promises to be a thoroughly interesting one dealing with the flight of a Russian refugee and her subsequent arrival in America where her beauty attracts an artist. But at this point there is a break and the story resolves on a long discussion on faith as a healer . . . until the feature becomes little short of a screen debate."

"Harry Garson tells the story well enough but his picture is too long notwithstanding that there have already been some eliminations. . . . The numerous subtitles also help to extend the footage. Clara Kimball Young gives a very good screen performance and a sincere one. The supporting cast is well suited and capable."

—Film Daily.

"It is rather unfortunate that more skill was not brought to bear in the working out of Daniel Carson Goodman's 'What's Wrong With the Women?' . . . His work comes to nothing because of an unevenness, a sketchiness, a lack of compression which is almost amateurish. The piece as it stands is more an exhibition than a play."

"One is inclined to be impatient with the author for the way in which he has pounded out some of his points. . . ."

—Morning Telegraph.

"JUST TONY" (Fox)

"'Just Tony' is one of the most unusual and interesting westerns that has been shown in a long time, this for the reason that many of the stellar honors fall upon the sleek back of Tony, Tom Mix's favorite mount, instead of the very reliable shoulders of Tom Mix himself."

"Tony is a most expressive actor. He can register the primitive emotions with the best of them. Hate, love, sympathy and understanding are all contained in the gamut of this horse."

"The story has been admirably moulded to suit Tony's talents, and yet irrelevant action and horse-play are not included in the picture."

"Lynn Reynolds, who adapted and directed the production from Max Brand's story, 'Alcatraz,' has cast it before beautiful western backgrounds."

—Motion Picture News.

"WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN?" (Equity)

"To say 'What's Wrong With the Women?' is one of the three greatest independent pictures turned out since 'Hearts of the World' is merely recording the fact without mention of which an injustice is done the production."

"This picture is so realistically clever that it seems to breathe the very air of present day life. . . . It is replete with suspense, surprise and a sense of humor that is refreshingly wholesome. . . . it's entertainment choked with action, realism, thrills and humor. It is elaborately produced and superbly acted throughout. Daniel Carson Goodman, who produced the picture, has every reason reason to feel proud of this production."

"The direction by R. William Neil is flawless, and the lighting good."

"So far as what is wrong with the women is concerned, the story is quite consistent but there is also something terribly wrong with the men, which the author has made no effort to analyze. . . . and there is something vitally wrong with young Jack Lee and the rich and elderly Mr. Bascom."

"Barbara Castleton, as the young wife, gives the best performance and Rod La Roque does satisfactory work, but Constance Bennett tries to be too willowy and blase while Hedda Hopper overacts all the way through."

—Film Daily.

"'What's Wrong With the Women' is an indictment of the craving for excitement among the flapper set and the younger married women and it's the truest document on the subject that has ever been revealed."

"Goodman has touched the bottom where the predecessors were content to skim the surface. The acting is fine—perhaps a little overacted here and there—yet it is always indicative of the jazz urge. Constance Bennett is a real find as the flapper. Where has she been these past seasons? Personality, poise, and emotional endowment are hers. The picture looks to us like a knockout."

—Motion Pictures News.

"In this quick-moving and intensely interesting picturization of the entanglements of two families can be found almost any answer one cares to seek."

"As the good but foolish wife, Barbara Castleton is pleasing and convincing, while as the rich young rake . . . Montague Love gives his usual finished performance. Rod La Roque makes a splendid impression as the young husband . . . and Wilton Lackaye is, of course, thorough as the wealthy business man."

What Folks Think

FREE IDEAS FOR ALL

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 22.—Editor CAMERA! Freedom from encumbrances of petty patents is essential to the industry, if American pictures are to hold the leadership of the world.

Producers in foreign countries not only enjoy the utmost co-operation of competitors, public, press and government; but also, foreign patent offices are loathe to grant protection to persons not indisputably the original discoverers and inventors.

When a devise is of only occasional and limited usefulness, what a pity to render it worthless to the trade by tying it up with patent papers, especially if the title is doubtful and can bring profit only to litigating attorneys.

A free and happy exchange of various photographic improvements—a community of ideas!—is best for all. Let everybody contribute to the progress, to the liberty and to the expansion of this most democratic and far-reaching of the arts, the art of cinematography.

Let us pool our ideas. And not build fences.

Script Market

(Writers are invited exchange marketing experiences with one another through this column in CAMERA! If so requested, writer's name will not be published; anonymous communications cannot be used, however.)

O'Connor Productions, 1107 North Bronson Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

Detail gag stories for two-reel semislapstick comedies suitable for Billy Franey; production cost about $6,000. Situation comedy plots in synopsis form for one- and two-reel comedies suitable for male lead with good feminine support. (Submit through mail to Gus Schumaker.)

Goldwyn Pictpres Corp., Culver City, Cal.

Does not want light comedies; stories exploiting personalities; costume stories; small town or western subjects.

Does want great stories of definite audience appeal; society backgrounds invaluable; fundamental human relationships resulting in terrific dramatic clashes desirable if not heavy or morbid; comedy dramas ending in spectacular climax; stories with at least one smashing sequence. (Paul Bern, scenario editor.)

Mayer Studio, 3800 Mission Road, Los Angeles, Cal.

Psychological, subtle story thread of American social life with tenderness and heart throb for John Stahl.

Virile drama with tense and consistent situation for Reginald Barker.

Modern drama and melodrama with color and atmosphere; fast stepping and intriguing story structure for Fred Nible. (J. G. Hawks, scenario editor.)

Lasky Studio, 1520 Vine Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Uses mostly published stories; originals must be big enough to make successful specials. (Frank E. Woods, scenario editor.)

Universal Film Mfg. Co., Universal City, Cal.

Snappy outdoor drama with strong flavor of comedy for Hoot Gibson.

Romance with mystery, strong love interest and fight stuff for Herb Rawlinson.

Deep drama, serious and themeful; fight moment with psychological point, for Frank Mayo.

Life dramas with great theme for Priscilla Dean.

Emotional stuff for Gladys Walton; pathetic, loveable figure preferred.

Usually novels or short stories for King Baggott. Hobart Henley, Jack Conway all-star productions; needn't feature one role; developed logically.

Serial stories with distinctly new and novel punch; usually developed by staff.

R-C Studio, Melrose and Gower, Los Angeles, Cal.

Rough and ready stories for Harry Carey.

Society or problem dramas for Ethel Clayton.

Two-reel comedies for Mr. and Mrs. Carter Dellaven.

Rex Ingram, Metro studio, 3 West 61st Street, New York, N. Y.

Big modern story of metropolitan life with romance and melodrama.

Fox studio, Sunset and Western Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

Western action stories for Tom Mix.

Outdoor stuff for William Russell.

Cute character ingenue stories for Shirley Mason. Society drama for John Gilbert. Outdoor stories for William and Dustin Farnum.

Burston Film Company, Brentwood studio, 4811 Fountain Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

Comedy drama for actor of Charles Ray type.

Morante Film Company, Long Beach studio, Long Beach, Cal.

Stories with mounted policemen or forest ranger as hero; mystery dramas; stories of the sea.

People

By Harry Burns

Charles Newton is doing "Pilate" and one of the scribes in the Pilgrimage Play, and how I hated Charles when I witnessed the production the other night. But, when I met him face to face, I saw my mistake for he was just as human as I, and was sure putting over some heart and soul interest throbs in the staging of some of the greatest scenes in the play. When one hates a villain in a play he must be good and I hated Charles Newton, so he must be—good.

Charles Lamont is on speaking terms with his wife once more. The reason is just this: Charles had to keep two directors working at the Hall Room Boys studios. He no more than finished with one than he started with the other. He came home so late and got out so early that he didn't even find time to pass the time of the day with friend wife. But now there are two alternating directors, Noel Smith and Al Santell, and as many assistants and Mr. Lamont can now stay home and eat his meals with Mrs. Lamont and enjoy life as he should and everything is serene once more.

Henry McCarthy states that he is going to have one of the fastest and most interesting pictures he ever made with Lester Cuneo when he completes the one he is working on right now; and has invited yours truly to come and give it the double O when he has written finis to it.

Melbourne McDowell and Tom Guise are playing excellent parts in the Reginald Denny-Leather Pushers picture that is being directed by Harry Pollard. Frank Messenger is the assistant director in charge of the production.

Ted Billings, who was a prop man when Los Angeles was a flag station and is still making good at it, is seeking a honest position that he can prop 'em up some more as of yore.

Archie Mayo is writing funny stories for comics that are laboring at the United studios.

Irving and Margaret Pringle had a nice engagement with the Jack Pickford Co., which will keep the kiddies happy for a wee bit of a time at any rate.

Hayden Stevenson plays the manager of Reginald Denney in the Leather Pushers series and never in my life have I seen a man who ever resembled another so much as Hayden looks like Harry Pollock, who was manager of Freddie Welsh when the latter was lightweight champion of the world.

Harry De More is around with a walking stick. Evidently he has been in a movie fight and it got a wee bit too real.

Halperin Productions are preparing to start work soon on its newest story, "Tea With A Kick."

Chas. Dorothey is playing a cook for William Watson out at the Universal.

John Meighan is getting to be a regular actor. He is playing a good line of parts at the different studios and seems to be in great demand.

Max Asher no sooner removed his character make-up from Carter De Haven's set at R-C than Johnnie Walker spotted him for a Mexican storekeeper's role in his new production, "Captain Fly-by-Night," which he started this week.

Ralph Cloninger has a great part in the Reginald Barker production now in the making at the Louis B. Mayer studios. Ralph is to go stark mad, which will afford him a chance to do some real acting.

The J. K. McDonald company is on location at Balboa where they are taking scenes for "Broadcasting," a Johnny Jones comedy. Mason Litson is directing.

Trixie Friganza and company returned from Riverside, where they made exteriors for an independent production, "Mind Over Motor."

Wesley Barry is vacationing at a nearby resort. On his return to the city he will start another production at Warner Brothers studios.

Raoul Walsh and company, who have been in the South Seas making "Passions of the Sea," will return to Los Angeles, September 5, after an eventful voyage.

"The Christian," produced by Maurice Tourneur, is being edited and will soon be ready for release.

Rupert Hughes' picture "Gimme," is nearing completion. The actual shooting has been finished and cutting is under way.

Edward Sloman's forthcoming production, "A Honeymoon for Three," is to be of the all-star type.

BRUCE McRAE PACKS GRIP AND FLITS TO GOTHAM

Bruce McRae is leaving cinema Hollywood!

And withstanding the fact he has a David Belasco contract in his pocket, he is indeed sorry to leave. He said so himself.

Mr. McRae has been playing a leading role in Dorothy Phillips' starring vehicle "The World's a Stage," being produced at United Studios by Principal Pictures Corporation and written by Elinor Glyn.

When the Henry Miller-Ruth Chatterton-Bruce McRae combination appeared at the Mason Opera House a short time since, Sol Lesser and Mike Rosenberg of the Principal Pictures organization saw in McRae screen possibilities. They bid for his services—and obtained them sufficiently long enough to make the episodes in which McRae would figure in the Glyn story.

McRae is to play opposite Ina Claire in "The Awful Truth," which opens next season at the Henry Miller Theatre, New York City. He states he wants to come back to the silent drama and intends doing so immediately his engagement under the Belasco banner is terminated.

"The World's a Stage" will be released this fall. It will be an eight-reel offering and is said to be classed as one of the coming season's finest.

FOREIGN NOTES

Hiram Abrams, Chairman of the Allied Artists Corporation, has just arrived in London and has appointed Carrol S. Trowbridge, who was formerly assistant general sales manager to Mr. Abrams in New York, to take charge of all business for Allied Artists corporation throughout the British Isles.

Carpentier Fights for the Sreen

In a production of Blackstons called, "My Lady April," Georges Carpentier was engaged to play the principle part and much excitement was caused at Edgeware, a quiet suburb of London, when a big fight was staged and fought out.

It was a fight between Georges Carpentier and Hary Drake, the London pugilist. There were scenes of fighting as they did it in the old days on the greensward with bare fists in the old Corinthian manner. Carpentier made his entrance by a daring leap over the heads of spectators into the ring.

Harry Drake was once Carpentier's sparring partner in London. Tom Barry, another London favorite, appeared as referee, and Mr. J. Stuart Blackton showed intimate knowledge of prize fighting in his direction of the scenes.

Harley Knoles, well-known here some time ago, is preparing a new production for the Alliance Film company and will commence work shortly.

Suzanne Lenglen, the world's champion tennis player, has been engaged by the Stoll Film company, London, to play in a two-reeler, "Tennis and How to Play It."

Miss Lenglen was photographed playing a set of singles, and a number of close-ups were taken of her most effective strokes.

Louise Lovely has been making an extensive tour of Western Canada from Vancouver to Winnipeg, making personal appearances at all the prominent moving picture theatres en route. Her tour has been an exceptional success.

The film rights of that well-known, old melodrama, "Harbour Lights," by George R. Sims and Henry Pettit, has been bought by the Ideal Film company and is to be filmed almost immediately. Tom Moore has been approached with a view to his going to England to play the lead but, up to now, nothing has been definitely settled.

The American Releasing Company is in the market for good pictures.

Thos. Jefferson is organizing his own company here. He owns valuable property on Long Island that has netted him close on to $500,000.

Charles Brabin has completed a picture. Sidney Olcott has finished one also.

Nicholas Duneau had to have part of his lower jaw cut away as a result of blood poisoning gotten in a barber shop. He is very ill at Roosevelt Hospital, N. Y., the past five weeks. He is a former coast player and would like to hear from his friends in Los Angeles.

Ray Smallwood and George Terwilliger are working with Kenneth Webb directing Betty Blythe.

Alan Crosland is finishing up at the Cosmopolitan with Lionel Barrymore.

Dell Henderson is directing Johnnie Hines with Doris Kenyon in a State right feature.

Jean Girardin, the daughter of the celebrated portrait painter of Paris and who played in "Silas Marner," will be featured in a big picture here.

Ray Physioc is in Florida to shoot a feature. Christy Cabanne is also down there.

Hamilton Smith has finished three features.

Studios here are idle like apartments use to be. There are more studios than companies.

The jaw of one of the whales captured by Elmer Clifton's whaling crew while cruising in the Caribbean Sea to film scenes for "Down to the Sea in Ships" was twenty-one feet long and had 46 teeth, each about twice the size of an ice cream cone.

R. B. McKenzie is playing on the dramatic side of Fox's, working in the William Farnum Co. under Emmett J. Flynn's direction.

Joe Girard and others of equal note are cast in the Stuart Paton picture at the Big U.

Gertrude Olmstead is playing opposite Neely Edwards and Bert Roach at the Big U with William Watson as director and A. Thompson as the assistant director.

Arthur Flaven is aiding Stuart Paton at the Big U where the latter is directing Herbert Rawlinson in a big feature production.

Christian J. Frank is with Herbert Rawlinson's company at Universal at the present time.

John Cossar has been added to the cast of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," to be produced at the Mayer studios by Preferred Pictures corporation, under the direction of Gasnier.

Palmer Photoplay Corporation

Enters Film Producing Field with Royalty to Writers

FOR four years the Palmer Photoplay Corporation has successfully discovered and trained new screen writers and sold the stories of its student-members to leading producers. Its students are now successfully directing stars, writing continuity, heading producing companies and filling important staff positions in the studios. In the last few years Palmer students have been carrying off scenario contest honors with gratifying consistency. In the greatest of all contests conducted last year by a great national daily, the first prize of $10,000 and eight other lesser prizes were won by Palmer students. The Palmer creative test questionnaire has become famous for its accuracy in determining whether or not aspiring writers have the natural ability for screen authorship.

The current step forward into the producing ranks does not in any sense alter our position relative to the studios and those producers who in the past have availed themselves of the Sales Department of this institution. It does reinforce our contention that the salvation of the screen lies in the discovery and development of new writing talent, and clearly outlines to the few producers who have ignored the value of good stories that the most practical means of encouraging the writing of better stories is to provide the scenarist with just compensation for his work.

Under the royalty plan put into effect by the Production Division of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, the author of a story selected for production receives a minimum of $1000, upon acceptance. When the completed picture is released for exhibition, accrued royalties will be paid as long as the profits of the production continue.

Story By

Buddy Ross is the latest addition to the Ben Wilson scenario forces. He is building up gags for Monte Banks and Eddie Barry, who are being directed by Ward Hayes and Mark Goldaine.

Beulah Marie Dix adapted "A Daughter of Luxury" from a play called "The Impostor" by Leonard Merrick and Michael Morton.

Katherine Newlin Burt wrote the story of "Singed Wings," which was adapted by E. A. Bingham and Ewart Adamson.

Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Condon conceived the idea of "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" and Will M. Ritchey with Mr. Condon put it into continuity.

"Making a Man" is one of Peter B. Kyne's best tales, which A. S. LeVino adapted.

Willard Mack wrote the play of "Kick In" and Ouida Bergere made the screen version.

Stephen French Whitman's novel "Sacrifice," has been adapted to the screen by Will M. Ritchey and will serve as a vehicle for Mary Miles Minter's next picture to be started September 4th, under the direction of Charles Maigne.

DAWN SUES SOME MORE

Norman Dawn filed suit Tuesday against Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., P. A. Powers, R. J. Tobin, Thomas Black, two incorporated companies, names unknown; and three men and two women, names unknown; charging infringement of a patent issued June 11, 1918.

Dawn's patent covers what is described as "a certain new improvement in cinematograph-picture composition."

He charges the defendants with producing and exhibiting pictures made by his process, and with preparing and threatening to continue so doing. He demands an injunction against further production and an accounting of all so far distributed.

The Technicolor Moton Picture corporation of Boston, has finished its first natural color production. The photography was ably directed by John Arnold and Harry L. Keepers, who are noted for their work.

Gloria Swanson will soon begin work on "His American Wife," a Sam Wood production of a story by Victor Turnbull, adapted by Monte M. Kat

RALPH CLONINGER

Although a newcomer to the screen, his portrayal of Fernande in "Monte Cristo" being his first work before the camera, Ralph Cloninger is coming rapidly to the fore. He has just returned from Canada where he went with the Reginald Barker company filming "Hearts Aflame," and is now preparing for further appearances.

He has been an actor-manager of his own stage companies for the past four years in Salt Lake City, where he is favorably known. He has been leading man with the Wilkes stock companies in both Spokane and Salt Lake City, and has appeared with such stars as Nance O'Neill, Marjorie Rambeau, Willard Mack, and Max Figman. With this foundation to build on there is no reason why this tall, black-haired young actor should not come forth as one of the leading figures of the screen within a very short time.

Lucien Andriot, who photographed Helen Jerome Eddy's first R-C starring story, has been engaged to perform similar duties for Johnnie Walker in his first starring picture. The story is "Captain Fly-by-Night" by Johnston McCulley.

Reginald Lyons, A. S. C., has been added to Larry Semon's cinematographic staff, where he will be associated with Hans Hoenekamp, A. S. C.

Tony G. Guadio, A. S. C., has left on a three-week vacation following the completion of "East is West."

Having finished his work on "Tess," Lyman Broening, A. S. C., is turning the crank on Jack Pickford in "Garrison's Finish."

Paul Iribe, Cecil De Mille art director, addressed the open meeting of the American Society of Cinematographers, Monday night. James Van Trees was chairman of the meeting.

Gilbert Warrenton, A. S. C., is in New York to photograph an Alice Brady feature.

"Broken Chains," a Goldwyn production, is finished and now being edited.

Herman C. Raymaker gave the Long Beachites a chance to see his manly form when he took a dip in the ocean. Latest reports have it that he didn't swallow all of the water, he left a little for his companion, who seemed all wrapped up in it.

Ida Schumaker and her charming daughter, Raida, are being kept busy about the different studios. Playing bits and whatnots that they are called upon to do from time to time.

Ruth Clifford is playing opposite Henry Walthall in a Fox production. No title has been selected as yet.

Tenny Wright sailed from Hamburg, August 8th, and will arrive in Hollywood in a few days.

Stereoptic Preview

The Perfect Pictures company announce their preview to be held at the Ambassador Hotel the first week of September, which will be the world's premier of the stereoscopic method of exhibition, in conjunction with their all-star feature film production, "The Power of Love," with Barbara Bedford, Noah Beery, Elliott Sparing, Aileen Manning, Albert Prisco, John Herdman, Phillip Sleeman and Frank Kingsley. Directed by Nat Deverich.

Requests have been received from many of the leading film executives, directors and famous stars to attend this preview and from all indications it will be the most exclusive event of its kind ever held in the city of Los Angeles and will be attended by more celebrities than have ever attended a preview of an independent production.

Bookings are now being made in the leading theatres throughout the West for the first road show which will open in the city of Los Angeles for the public immediately after the preview.

HAND PAINTED EPITAPHS By John Meighan

Dedicated to the Assistant Directors

1. Don't worry—you know what that will get you.
2. Don't be afraid to ask questions, from the prop boy to the manager.
3. Don't be consistent.
4. Don't neglect the smile (for all).
5. Don't use can't and if.
6. Don't forget to finish all your work before departing from studio at the end of the day.
7. Don't forget the under-dog may be your boss tomorrow.
8. Don't argue—reason.
9. Don't forget to be the master of your destiny.
10. Don't overlook hooks and observations.
11. Don't forget perspiration 90% aspiration 10%—success.
12. Don't use your brain for a memory box—let it be the motor.

Cutting Up

Frank Atkinson finished cutting "The Long Chance," which was directed by Jack Conway. Herbert Rawlinson the star.

Ed Schroeder is putting the "Leather Pushers" in shape for shipping to New York. Harry Pollard directed. Reggie Denny is being featured in this series.

Frank Ware and James McKay, are trimming down "The Flirt," which Hobart Henley produced with Marie Prevost.

Eddie Curtis is putting the pep and life into the "Laramie Lad," which has Hoot Gibson as the main attraction. Reaves Eason was the boss of the directing of this subject.

Ted Cheesman will handle the Jack London, Fish Patrol series now in the making, under the directorial guidance of Eddie Kull, with Jack Mulhall in the stellar role.

Tommy Pratt has his hands full with two subjects, "The Kentucky Derby" and the latest efforts of Gladys Walton, which King Baggot gets credit for as director.

Ray Curtis is handling the Wm. Desmond serial, directed by J. P. McGowan.

Jack Jackson is cutting the "Radio King," which Bob Hill produced.

Shorty Holtz is cutting "Bitter Sweets," so that when New York gets it, it will give Lon Chaney credit for putting another work of art over. Lambert Hillyer shouted "camera" and cut at the artists in the production.

THIS WEEK'S EXPLOITATION HINT

Exhibitors showing "The Kid" can attract the attention of public and police by dressing a small boy in ragged overalls and Jackie Coogie cap and paying him $1 for every window he throws a rock through. This is a unique stunt and cannot fail to attract attention. Your local newspaper will probably give the stunt extra publicity besides that carried by your advertising.

Eclair Reunion

Mr. and Mrs. J. Gunnis Davis sent out a hurry call for all the members of the old Eclair company to meet at their home on Sunday to greet Mr. and Mrs. George Nagel, who are in town with Texas Guinan, laying off for a few days on account of the railroad strike.

That the spirit of the Eclair is not dead was evidenced by the alacrity with which the summons was responded to by Barbara Tennant; Clara Horton (the "Eclair Baby") and her mother, Emile Chautard, Mr. and Mrs. Webster Cullison, Mr. and Mrs. George Larkin, Mr. and Mrs. Hal Wilson, Winthrop Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. Mason Litson, Alice Knowland, Mr. and Mrs. Nestel ("Gertie Wagner") and Mr. and Mrs. Georges Benoit.

AUTO TURNS TURTLE

Little Mickey McBan and his mother had a narrow escape last Monday when going to work at the Cosmoart studios. Mrs. McBan was driving her enclosed car when another car, driven by a woman, crashed into the side of it and made it turn completely over. Mrs. McBan says that the only tragedy is that her car was not insured, for it was smashed completely to pieces and Mickey and his mother escaped with only a few bruises.

We Sometimes Think

That it is easier to communicate with Mars than some studio managements.

That stars should be fitted to the story, instead of misfitting stories to stars.

That Canadian woodlands and the shiek's romping grounds ought to be given quite a rest.

That Will Hays has his hands full with his salaried interests, without working any miracles for the Independents.

That the author's name on the screen should enjoy as much prominence than the time worn announcement, "The Fungo Corporation presents—"

That reviewers might make a terrific effort now and then, and mention the author of the photoplay, although ethics seem to be against such rash procedure.

That the wrong kind of "new blood" in the picture business, is much worse than he right kind of "old blood," distant critics to the contrary notwithstanding.

That a little struggle with the old bean might reveal to numerous personages that, in many cases, it is the scenario, but neither director or star, that is very largely responsible for successes.

GIVE US CENSORSHIP

GENERAL censorship is demanded for motion pictures. Camera! is decidedly for it.

Certain churches are fighting for it; members of the cloth urge it; some legislators favor it; a number of financial interests are aiding in the battle; many private citizens express the desire for censorship.

Therefore, let us have censorship. Let us have the same kind of censorship that singles out the erring citizen and punishes him; the kind that puts the crooked financier behind the bars, and sends, now and then, a member of a religious institution to a prison cell.

Yes, the same censorship which has added members of the cloth to murderers' row, to say nothing of numerous legislative members who wear the stripes without the stars.

That kind of censorship ought to be sufficient for even the terrible motion pictures which, by some ridiculous mischance, have done as much good in the world as the entire church, during the last decade.

That censorship in these United States has been deemed sufficient to deal with the failings of 100,000,000 inhabitants, from the petty thief to the man, Cain.

It is a censorship which had its beginnings with the establishment of the greatest republic of the earth, and has constantly been built up throughout the years, by the greatest brains and the keenest judiciary extant.

Then give the motion pictures this censorship—THE LAW!

There can be but one greater censorship than that. If there dwells upon earth, a super-human who is so created that he is greater than the minds of all fellow men, who possesses infallible judgment upon all things, then let him be the world's one motion-picture censor.

In which case the churches of the earth should gather in one vast conclave and inform the Almighty that He now may cease from functioning.

Criticizing the Critic

CRITICS who write opinions of the cinematic productions of Nazimova had better watch their words.

If their estimates of merit are considered insincere, uncalled for or exaggerated the critic may find himself criticized.

First-critizer of critics is Walter Anthony, erstwhile dramatic critic himself, whose scathing and seething phrases have not rusted in his typewriter during his sallies into press agency.

Advertising is often the heaviest weight in the critical balance of trade press reviews.

A lofty condemnation of "Salome" by a trade journal reviewer was the occasion.

Anthony tore the reviewer's words syllable from syllable and flung them skilfully in his face.

Nor is this uncalled for.

A work of art is one man's (or woman's) work. A criticism is one man's opinion of it. And surely one man's opinion may be questioned by another.

Film Capital Production Notes

"OMAR THE TENTMAKER" COMPLETED

Late this week marked the actual filming of the final scene in Guy Bates Post's screen vehicle, "Omar the Tentmaker," an adaptation from Richard Walton Tully's stage play of the same name that served Post on the speaking stage for over four years. "Omar the Tentmaker" will follow "The Masquerader." Both well directed by James Young.

Elaine Hammerstein's latest picture, "Under Oath," is the first of a new series of pictures made at the Coast studios of the Selznick organization.

Rowland V. Lee has cast the following to appear in his production of "A Circus Story," starring Shirley Mason for Fox: Allen Hale, George O'Hara, Lulu Warrington, Craveford Kent, Maude Wayne and Mathilde Brundage.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" is to be Mary Pickford's next starring picture.

The Kenmad company, featuring Madge Kennedy, in New York, bought the story a few weeks ago, but Miss Kennedy decided to accept an offer from Miss Pickford to relinquish the rights.

Production has started on another Hoot Gibson vehicle at Universal City. Nat Ross is directing the opening scenes of "Ridin' Wild," a story written and scenarized by Roy Myers.

Edna Murphy will be the chief feminine attraction in the cast and Wade Boteler, William Welsh, Otto Hoffman and others have been chosen.

Thursday, August 24, 1922, marks the beginning of "Merry Go Round," Erich von Stroheim's forthcoming picture.

Max Graf, vice-president and supervising director of Graf Productions, Inc., of San Francisco, arrived in New York this week to consummate releasing arrangements for "The Forgotten Law," the first of a series of feature productions to be filmed by the new organization.

The story, which was adapted from Caroline Abbott Stanley's novel, "A Modern Madonna," met with exceptional success as a book.

Mr. Graf expects to remain in New York about three weeks in order to complete his releasing and sales arrangements and to make a survey of the literary market for material for future productions to be made by his organization.

Sanford productions have finished another Tweedy comedy and are preparing to start a feature subject. Alexander Alt is aiding Marzel Perez in the direction of the company.

Harry Carey has just started another five-reel feature which has the following well known players in the cast. Vola Vail, Chas. Le Moyne, Joe Harris and Chas. B. Murphy. Val Paul is directing while Ted Brooks is his assistant. Arthur Frasneda still handles the business.

Frank Mayo has finished "The Altar Stairs" and begins production immediately at Universal City on "The Hot Head."

Gladys Walton finished "The Lavender Bath Lady" and chose the cool waters of the Pacific and the quiet of Catalina for her vacation after an extremely difficult role. King Baggot directed this Shannon Fife story from a George Randolph Chester continuity.

J. P. McGowan is preparing "Around the World in Eighteen Days," a modern version in serial form of Jules Verne's classic.

Belasco Productions, Inc., of San Francisco have removed their producing unit to Los Angeles and are preparing to start production of Lois Zelliner's original story "Her Price." The picture will be produced under the personal direction of Dallas M. Fitz Gerald with an all-star cast. Production activity will last eight weeks or more.

The cutting and titling of the Harry Rapf production, for Warner Brothers, "Little Heroes of the Street," starring Wesley Barry and directed by William Beaudine is rapidly going forward. A date for the preview will be set soon.

Mystery surrounds the type of story Finis Fox is said to have chosen for his next venture in the production field. He is now preparing the continuity for the picture and expects to start actual filming in a few days.

Sidney Franklin, who will direct the Harry Rapf production, for Warner Brothers of Charles G. Norris' famous novel, "Brass," will return from his vacation within the week and start production. Julien Josephson, who is putting the book in continuity form, expects to finish in two weeks.

B. P. Schulberg expects to complete the filming of "The Lonely Road," Katherine MacDonald's recent starring vehicle, next week. Victor Schertzinger is directing.

Priscilla Dean is two-thirds finished with "Lady Raffles," a story written for her by Tod Browning and which he directs. Her next story will be "Drifting," a smashing, colorful story of China for which Lucien Hubbard is writing the continuity. Browning will again direct.

Frank Mayo has finished "The Altar Stairs," G. B. Lancaster's romance of moon-swept beaches under the Southern Cross. He will begin starring immediately on "The Hot Head," a speedy action romance by Lillian Chester. Edward Eedgwick will direct from the continuity of George Randolph Chester.

Erle Kenton is prepared to start another comedy at the Fox studios.

Horace Williams is looking for new talent for his initial subject that he will be casting soon.

SELZNICK REVIVAL

The approaching revival of "The New Moon" in which Norma Talmadge is starred, recalls the reception this Selznick picture received on the occasion of its first showing. It is an exceedingly dramatic production of Russian life and deals with Russian politics. The English government protested against its showing in that country, and there was considerable discussion regarding the matter here in the United States. The picture was directed by Chester Withey.

Lee Shumway is co-directing with Philip Hubbard, and also being featured with ZaSu Pitts at the Cosmosart studios for the Pilot Productions. They are a new independent producing company.

"Suzanna," the next feature production to be released by Mack Sennett, in which Mabel Normand will star, soon will be out of the cutting and titling room and in the distributing hands of First National Pictures.

Production has begun at Universal City on a series of eight two-reelers adapted from Jack London's celebrated "Tales of the Fish Patrol" virile short stories of the marine police who preserve order among the lawless foreign fishermen in the waters around San Francisco. Jack Mulhall is starred in the series. Edward Kull is the director.

Rupert Hughes will make a production of his own novel, "Souls For Sale," the screen adaptation of which he is now preparing for Goldwyn. The cast has not yet been announced.

Herbert Rawlinson finished "Another Man's Shoes," Victor Bridges' novel that is more than straight entertainment.

Wallace Reid is started in a new production which carries the title of "Thirty Days" in which appears Wanda Hawley, Hershall Mayhall, Carmen Philips, and many others of equal note. James Cruze is the director with Karl Brown as chief cameraman.

Larry Semon is doing another feature comedy at the Vitagraph which is along the lines of "The Grocery Clerk" that he did some time back. Earl Olin is his art and technical director.

J. P. Spencer expects to leave for the Hawaiian Islands about the first of November to make some pictures with Duke Kakmakau, the world famed swimmer, picturing him in his native land on the Honolulu beaches and in the surf.

Under direction of Henry McCarty, Doubleday Productions plan to start a new story this week at Fine Arts. Lester Cuneo is star and Francelia Billington (Mrs. Cuneo) has the leading feminine role.

David Ingraham Productions will film first scenes of its initial subject this week under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, son of the producer. A cast for the picture is now being assembled.

Current Reviews

"Kindred of the Dust"

WITHOUT the noted cast and capable direction that is shown in "Kindred of the Dust" the production would be no more than a program picture and a very poor one. The story is of uneven tempo. For three reels there is good continuity of plot, then it slows down to the logical ending. But it does not end there, nor at the next point where the "End" caption could easily have been. This goes on until it reaches a tame, manufactured "movie" ending. And all to avoid the unhappy termination that producers are so afraid of but that audiences like to see.

However, the direction by R. A. Walsh was excellent. He handles his people to the best advantage.

The photography is beautiful and the lighting is effective.

Ralph Graves, leading man, monopolizes the entire picture with his magnetic personality and forceful acting. He is indeed an artist.

Miriam Cooper hasn't forgotten her Griffith tricks, and they are easily recognized but do not mix well with the direction of another than D. W. She has one sequence of dramatic scenes in which she shows marked ability, however.

Bruce Guenin, baby actor, stars in the comedy role here, and often touches the heart strings with his appealing bits of action.

Eugenie Besserer as the mother is excellent. She gives a genuine emotional portrayal.

Lionel Belmore is one of the featured players of the cast. His work is impressive. Maryland Morne could well have been omitted from the cast. Her part had nothing to do with the story and her acting didn't justify the part.

"Flesh and Blood"

IT is no longer necessary, apparently, for a producer to have a good story to work with. All he needs is a noted cast with a star such as Lon Chaney then he tosses the product on a market where reels of film are so scarce that the exhibitor is helpless.

That is what Irving Cummings has done with "Flesh and Blood." Lon Chaney's name has risen to a commercial value, so, instead of giving him a trooping part, as we have seen Chaney work before, he gives him less action and a thousand feet or more of closeups through the picture.

The story written and adapted with the help of Hope Loring makes a good start. For one reel the continuity is smooth. Then it flies off at a tangent and one forgets that there ever was a story connected with the series of situations.

Next we waited expectantly for Lon Chaney to portray another character such as "The Penalty" gave him. But instead we saw long close-ups, due to direction and story, where Chaney registered every expression in the book and then gave variations of the same. But he only did as directed and it was well done, so it was just an unfortunate lot of circumstances for him.

Noah Beery as Li Fang gave a splendid portrayal of the saue Chinaman. That is if one stayed awake long enough to see him introduced.

Ralph Lewis, another character man, didn't have a good chance to win any honors because of a poor part.

Jack Mulhall dashed through six or less scenes but it was enough to arouse our suspicions that there was a love interest angle to the story. However, he has a nice personality and his work was appreciated.

He was chosen from many hundred kiddies as a movie candidate, and now little Jack Parkep is out in Hollywood among the big ones.

Edith Roberts is appealing and pretty. She shows real ability as the "Angel Lady" of the tenaments.

Bits in the picture are played by Wilfred Lucas, Kate Price, De Witt Jennings, and Togo Yamamoto.

Ashamed of Parents

ONE could not imagine that any picture could be worse than this title, but this one is.

Warner Brothers have done a long research in rounding up this prodigal, which must have strayed away about the year they kidnapped Charley Ross.

But, regardless of senility, trailing whisks and crutches, to pass lightly over the odor of decaying hokum, "Ashamed of Parents" has been thrust upon the market by sponsors who are assuming that parentage.

Nothing else afflicts this production, if we except the story, continuity, direction, photography and titles which complete the inquest.

"The Queen of the Moulin Rouge"

WITHOUT the title "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" and the camera work of Michael Joyce this Ray Smallwood production could never have survived its preview. But there are good night shots and the sets are fairly accurate due to the art direction of Ben Caree.

We cannot well refer to a story here, for it would be in vain. However, the program bylines Paul M. Potter and credits Garfield Thompson and Peter Milne with the continuity. We are taking a guess at the contents of the script when we make the speculation that the scenarists have written throughout: "When in doubt as to action throw in a few hundred feet of scenic film, from shelf nine of the stock room." At least that explanation would cover a multitude of footage that is foreign to the picture.

Martha Mansfield is pretty at times, but the producer might have borrowed a wax mannikin and posed it for long shots and closeups with the same results.

Joseph Striker is a new juvenile and like most new products is inflexible.

Jane Thomas shines like a star on a dark night. She has no competition for feminine acting honors so she takes them all in the first reel, then is out of the action.

Others in the cast are Harry Harmon, Fred Jones, Tom Blake and Mario Crillo.

"The Loves of Pharaoh"

IT is rather confusing to see a teutonic Pharaoh and aborigine Ethiopian army, but outside of such trifles "The Loves of Pharaoh" makes a new mark for foreign productions. The photography, gorgeous sets, the well-handled mobs, and the lightings all show that great effort has been put forth to make this not only an artistic production but a spectacle as well.

Ernest Lubitsch directed. To him belongs the credit of handling the mobs. Each and every one of them works as though the success of the picture rested upon his shoulders. and it does. The extras made the film what it was.

The individuals of the cast cannot claim much credit. Emil Jannings as Pharaoh and Dagny Servaes as Theonis, with their own native gestures portrayed the Egyptian king and queen.

Paul Wegener as King of the Ethiopians is a comedy element as we have learned after taxing our imaginations. But the German idea of comedy is rather soggy and only the kind hearted laugh.

As we mentioned before, the sets and lightings cannot be matched up even with our own past glories.

Sam Appell is once more cast in a Lasky production; this time he is with James Cruze.

Tom Buckingham is directing Larry Seamon in a Canadian Northwestern story.

Larry Fischer is doing a butler for the Selznick organization on the United lot.

Abe Stern is causing things to move along in good shape at the Century studios ever since he set foot on Los Angeles soil from a trip to Europe. Bert Sternback will aid him.

Major McGuire is working at the Majestic theatre where he is playing an excellent part in the play now on the boards.

Ivan Kahn has once more taken over "The Classic Agency" and is rustling about the studios to get his lineup of artists' employment.

Ed Pearson and his two dogs are helping to put novelty into the "Pride of Palomar" that is being directed by Frank Borzage at the Hollywood studios.

George O'Hara, juvenile leading man, has, through arrangement with Mack Sennett and the Fox Film Company, been engaged to play the male lead opposite Shirley Mason in her next starring vehicle.

James E. Brigham, a recent graduate of Yale, is now with the Jack C. O'Brien Productions as assistant business manager. James is a decided acquisition to the company.

Coy Watson, Jr., is playing the part of "Muggins" with Earle Williams at the Vitagraph studios in "You Never Know." His dog Peb is with him, and they expect to be working for about four weeks.

Walter Emerson is now appearing in support of Henry B. Walthall in a feature being filmed by William Fox.

Emile Chautard has been engaged by Universal. He will direct an all-star Universal-Jewel dramatization of "Forsaking All Others," a magazine sensation by Mary Lerner.

Marian Sais is playing opposite Jack Hoxie in his present five-reel feature that he is making for the Sunset productions. Robert Bradbury is directing, and Jack Pierce is the assistant.

Monty Banks is doing a prize fight story at the Berwilla studios, under the direction of Ward Hayes. He has a capable cast.

Clara Lee Houseman is devoting most of her time to working for United directors.

Earl Rodney finished playing the "King" in the Bobby Vernon comedy that is being directed by Al E. Christie, and will next play for the Dorothy Devore story that will be started by Christie as soon as he completes his present subject.

Shea's Hippodrome, North Park, and Shea's Lafayette Square, Olympic and Loew's State theatres are THE first class theatres of Buffalo. They present the finest in pictures, music, service and entertainment of a diversified nature.

Shubert's Teck opens early in September with "The Blushing Bride" — direct from New York.

Myron Selznick has engaged two more players for the cast of "One Week of Love," which Archainbaud is directing. Kate Lester has been loaned by the Goldwyn company to Mr. Selznick, and Frank Hayes, one of the screen's old timers, has been cast for a comedy role.

Lon Chaney has been engaged by Universal to star in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," that company's forthcoming Jewel production of "Notre Dame de Paris," Victor Hugo's immortal novel. Work on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" will begin soon. The scenario is now being prepared by the scenario staff at Universal City.

George Hackathorne, one of the screen's most popular character juveniles, has been engaged by Universal for "Merry Go Round," Erich von Stroheim's new film masterpiece. Hackathorne's most recent work with Universal was the portrayal of the half-wit in "Human Hearts."

Mary Hunt, long identified with the Sennett scenario department, is now publicity director for the Garson studio.

Buddy Weller has been cast in a James Cruze picture starring Wallace Reid. Miss Weller has been working in Lasky pictures for two years and is fast winning recognition from directors there.

Geary O'Dell is playing the heavy with Monty Banks at the Berwilla studios in his latest production.

Helen Dale has signed a contract with Eddie Lyons to play opposite Bobby Dunn in a series of five two-reel productions. She has had prominent parts and leads at Universal and recently won second place in the flappers' parade at Venice, and another beauty contest at Redondo Beach. She has been on the Orpheum circuit two years and with Kolb and Dill one season.

What Folks Think

KNOWS WHAT THE PUBLIC WANTS

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 27.—Editor Camera!—Referring to your criticism about Universal's "Don't Shoot," I must admit that you have told nothing but the truth, and I was very much pleased with your article. But, pardon me, you are wrong in saying "There must be a great shortage of original stories."

The studios will find all they want and need, if they only would read a few copyrighted synopses published in the "Scenario-Bulletin Digest."

There is plenty of new and good material at their disposal.

The public, yes, the people in whole, is looking and waiting for pictures of every-day life — human — natural, with no impossibilities. I have taken great care in solving this problem, and believe my work will be welcomed by the public if I was given a chance to assist in the production of my brain children.

What is the matter with the production managers? Why do they produce so many pictures where drink is reigning? America, our country, is dry since 1920.

Pickups By The Staff

EDDIE LAEMMLE ILL IN BERLIN

Production work on the part of the company sent to Europe by Universal for the production of "Castle Cranecrow" has been delayed by the illness of Edward Laemmle, the director. Harry Myers, who is to star in the picture, has been recalled to Universal City temporarily, and has just arrived in New York from Berlin. He is accompanied by Tenny Wright and David Stumar, Universal cameramen.

Young Laemmle is now undergoing hospital treatment in the German capital. It will be many weeks before he is ready to take up his production plans again. He is suffering from a blood affection brought on by overwork and nervous strain.

"I am always chasing sunsets," says Ray Rennahan, cameraman with the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, who has been alternating between Portuguese Bend and Redondo awaiting the elusive clouds.

Maurice (Lefty) Flynn has completed his engagement in "Omar the Tentmaker."

Lucile Rickson has been added to the cast of Marshall Neilan's production of "The Strangers' Banquet," nearing completion at the Goldwyn studio.

Miss Rickson will play the part of "The Flapper" in Mr. Neilan's and Frank Urson's adaptation of Donn Byrne's story.

Renaud Hoffman has been engaged by Lou Anger, general manager of the Joseph M. Schenck Productions, to prepare the art titles for the Norma Talmadge feature film, "The Voice from the Minaret," which Frank Lloyd directed.

Following a preview in Los Angeles last week, Charles Chaplin is putting the final touches on his latest comedy. The production will be released as a special.

Spencer Valentine dropped in from San Francisco and is in the market to buy some comedies for the Orient and the States, and can be reached at 822 Chronicle Building, San Francisco.

Andre Anderson closed up his exhibition of Little Napoleon at Long Beach the other day to bring the chimpanzee up to Lasky's studios for a few scenes in the Penrhyn Stanlaws picture. The ape with the almost human brain had to enter a banquet, sit down, open a bottle of champagne and be handed a cigar by a charming girl who lit it for him. He did it without a protest.

Douglas Fairbanks gave a preview of his latest production, "Robin Hood," which was in eight reels. When the picture was first put together it was in 17 reels and finally trimmed down to its present length.

Lillian Langdon should have been credited with putting over that very clever delineation of the "chicken fancier" in "Lights of The Desert." The last issue of this periodical credited Lillian Leighton with playing the part.

Lafayette Square Theatre is playing Elaine Hammerstein's "Under Oath" in conjunction with a fine vaudeville bill.

Sid Grauman paid Jackie Coogan a visit over at the Goldwyn studios where the starlet was working on a street set.

The Electrical Illuminating Engineers' Society had a meeting scheduled for last Thursday night at Hollywood studio. Tommy Thompson, electrical engineer of Hollywood studio, was to be one of the chief entertainers.

The Capitol Theatre showing of "Makin' Movies," beginning on August 27, started the second of Pathe's Johnny Jones Series of "juvenile business" comedies on its career.

Reviews of "Makin' Movies" speak for themselves, fully bearing out the high opinions expressed by writers who attended the Hollywood pre-view.

Lester Cuneo has finished another picture for the Doubleday Corporation which has Charles Mack as general manager, Henry McCarthy as director and scenario chieftain. The subject was previewed Friday evening at the Paramount Theatre and Mike Rosenberg put his stamp of approval on the five-reel feature.

The contents of Universal's Coytesville, N. J., studio are to be auctioned off September 14. The auction will be held at the studio on Lemoine avenue, Coytesville. That company has made no pictures in the Coytesville studio for several years.

Wesley Barry is going to make a personal appearance tour with an act of ten people and George Dumond, who by arrangement with Warner Brothers, will manage the act.

William A. Seiter, who is to direct the film version of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," has gone to Catalina for a few days where he is studying the script and preparing to start shooting.

Elaine Hammerstein is recovering from cuts and bruises which she received when she dove into the rapids of the San Joaquin River just outside Fresno for scenes in the Selznick production "One Week of Love."

Clara Kimball Young has been vacationing in Monterey, but is expected back the latter part of this week.

Finn Haakon Frolich, the sculptor, who designed the sets for "Intolerance" and "The Queen of Sheba," has held several impromptu entertainments at his home, "The Norse Studio," on Wilcox near Sunset recently. One particularly interesting affair was held two weeks ago, three hundred guests being present. J. J. Carey was master of ceremonies, and Alyse Hunt Whitaker (Mrs. Edward M. Kimball) was hostess, and Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Flood rendered several interesting harp and vocal selections, while two young lady pupils of George Smalt, ballet master, gave a Hindu nautch dance that was very well received. Among the other entertainers were Mrs. Brotherton and Mr. Frank Sacras, together with Rosa Macies and Wheeler Dryden.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, is expected back in New York the latter part of September.

STAGE "DREAM" FOR ACTORS' FUND

Actors' Fund week will be observed in the motion picture community October 1 to 7.

According to Frank E. Woods, chairman of the motion picture committee, the week will start with a dinner to Daniel Frohman, president of the fund.

The Motion Picture Directors association, the Screen Writers' Guild, the American Society of Cinematographers, the Motion Picture Producers' association and the Assistant Directors' association are among organizations said to have pledged support.

A performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in the Hollywood Bowl will be staged by the directors' association to conclude the week. Frederick Sullivan will direct. Major Maurice Campbell, Frank Beall and Percy Heath form the committee in charge.

Anna Q. Nilson was burned about the face when guiding a locomotive through a forest fire near Pacoima canon Tuesday for Reginald Barker's picture, "Hearts Aflame."

Percy Hibern, cameraman, and Craig Ward, actor, were also burned.

Marcella Pershing was married Friday to J. H. Johnson of Miami, Fla., at the Ambassador Hotel. Their honeymoon will start at Catalina Island, after which they will go east.

Rex Roselli is ill in Columbus, Indiana, and has wired to his son "Happy" that he is pretty low and wants his wife to come on to him.

Jeanette Lajeunesse and her charming baby girl are to entertain the assistant director association boys, at their next regular meeting, with a number of dances.

Chris Martin started a picture which deals with Indians, Mexicans, and all sorts of locations. He intends to make a tour of New Mexico with the subject and interest some capital in that country to make a series of such stories.

The Reliable Photoplayers Association gave their initial entertainment and dance the other evening at the Walker Auditorium. So enthused are the members of that organization, that a month hence they intend to give a barn dance in one of the studios, doing things on a larger scale, so they can accommodate every one that cares to attend. Ed Yeager handled the affair, and a very good orchestra afforded good music for the dancing.

Henceforth all automobiles used in Ward Lascelle's production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Mind Over Matter" will be equipped with sand ballast bags.

Which explains the automobile wreck at Riverside several days ago.

Two automobiles were racing axle to axle on a track when, rounding the turn, one machine toppled crazily over the other. Trixie Friganza had been sitting on the toppling side of the toppling machine. Her strength and breadth of character had been too much for the flighty turn.

In the future, therefore, the sand ballast will be on the side of the automobile "where Trixie ain't."

Chatter of Southland Folks - By.... Harry Burns

Chas. B. Murphy handed me this one, which is good enough to be repeated in the Camera! columns. "Jim Jeffries and Jack Johnson tried to come back, but they failed. Listen closely—for hereby hangs a tale. C. B. Murphy played many a part, but, that was in the past; look through Camera! and you will find him in Harry Carey's cast."

Leo Pearson has been handed the script that Charles Maigne is to work on next and he will answer to the cognomen of the assistant director at the Lasky Famous Corp.

Harry Mann is playing a polished Wop crook in the Wallace Reid production which is being directed by James Cruze at Lasky's studios. And now that Harry has broken the ice as a dramatic actor, he ought to stick to it, for every funster that ever does step into the serious field, usually brings home the bacon.

Ray Hatton can easily be dubbed the most youthful character man in filmland, especially among the noted artists. Caught him made up at Lasky's the other day, the putty nose that he had on was a work of art.

Lewis Sargent when approached by an insurance agent the other day to take out some policy that would protect him against accidents, turned the proposition down cold. Five minutes later while waiting to be called on the set, someone accidentally dropped a hammer and crowned Lewis. When he realized what happened he beat Paddock's sprint record to find the insurance man.

Herbert Rawlinson, while talking over the radio the other evening for a newspaper, promised to say a few things about Bert Roach. Bert was listening in, and sure enough, Herb mentioned, in the course of his conversation, that he hoped Bert was listening in, and there stood Bert, powerless to answer back.

Noel Smith, who directs the Hall Room Boys comedies, had a 8 a. m. call and, to make sure that all of his troupe was on the job, he got up early, drove his car up to their homes, knocked on the door, personally gave them a call, and then hopping in his car, beat it to the location. "No chance for alibis with my troupe," said Noel.

Hank Mann turned carpenter the other day. He took an old kit of carpenter tools and started building a home for his folks in Topango Canyon.

Tom Mix isn't a bit backward about advertising another cowboy-actor star. Sunday at Santa Monica he rode on a pinto horse with another rider wearing a white sweater with the following lettering: HOOT GIBSON CO. It was easier for Tom to ride than walk in the sand, so he just told the cowboy to move up and jumped onto the saddle and rode up to greet Sheriff Bill Traeger who was giving a barbecue to his followers.

Al (S. E.) Jennings is keeping busy these days.

Maury Roth, in between thinking up funny gags for comedies, tries to figure out what charmer we have in Sunny California that is as pretty as his wife, who was born in the East. If some men would follow in the footsteps of Maury we would all be happier.

Al Kelly seems very happy now he is back at the Metro. While he was working elsewhere he looked like a ship without a rudder who was on a high sea, and no telling just the way the wind was liable to drive 'er.

Irvin Willat has had his eye on "All the Brothers Were Valiant" for years, and has hoped that some day he could produce that story. It fell to the lot of the Metro corporation to put Irvin's dream into a reality, and now we can all look forward to another one of those sea pictures.

Dad Roach has made a regular job for himself with his son, Hal E. Roach, who produces the Harold Lloyd, Snub Pollard, Paul Parrott, and "His Rascals" comedies at the Roach studios. Back in the old Rolin days up on the Court Flight hills, every one was rustling and working hard to gain a certain position, and today that said place has arrived and with it, Hal E. Roach has delivered the goods, and Dad Roach has grown right up with the institution, and has one of the most responsible positions connected with the organization.

Anna Wilson and Bessie Wade must have signed an agreement with all casting offices to the effect wherever one works the other must do likewise, for you never see them apart whenever there is a big set with a number of girls.

Floyd Jackman seems to have a life time job with the Lester Cuneo-Henry McCarty-Charles Mack unit at the Fine Arts studios. Every time the cast and roster is handed out for a new production being started, they always wind up with and "Floyd Jackman will be the cameraman or cinematographer."

Harry Brandt is very lonesome over at the Joseph Schenck offices. All he has to keep him company is a office full of phones jingling and ringing with people wanting to talk to some of the Talmadges or Schencks, who must be on the high seas about now.

Kala Pasha and his wife caught enough fish at Redondo the other day, that every one in the neighborhood had a fish feast, not forgetting some of the Laskyites. A fish peddler, happening along the street where Kala lives, left the district in disgust wondering why his regular customers wouldn't buy fish from him any more.

Eddie Lyons is back from New York City, and will soon start comedies working. Eugene De Rue is helping Eddie put the series over in a directorial way. He says that his chief has big plans for future outputs.

Mal St. Clair is working on a continuity for his next picture at the R-C studios, which deals with a big prize fight. As soon as the story is completed Mal will cast the picture and start things moving. He expects to have his entire unit that aided him to produce the Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven series, which have stopped for the time being so the clever duo can make a personal appearance throughout the good old U. S. A.

Charles Conklin is trying to desert comedies and take a fling at the more serious stuff. He used to play in stock and was featured in such plays as "Rip Van Winkle." Why not let's see if he can repeat in silent drama what he did on the speaking stage.

Jack Holt no more than returned from New York city with Joseph Henaberry, than he was working on an interior set that resembled a corner in one of the metropolis parks.

Lee Moran has been playing a game of hide and seek with New York producers, managers, and friends. One day we read that he, Arvid Gildstrom and Brick Enright motored to the big city; then we discover that they arrived there; and finally we learn that Lee never was this side of the rockies, and Brick Enright is pulling down so much a week to cut Hampton Del Ruth's picture at Long Beach. Press agents will hang their best friend to get them into the print, so some of you stars, tell your P. A. boys not to get their dates mixed.

Slim Hazel, who would rather ride a horse than eat, had to do without his horse for one picture. But he picked up eating money by working in prize fight scenes for Harry Pollard at the Big U.

Dave Allen believes, whenever he has a lineup of people to report at any distant studio, it is his place to be there and see to it that the people not only get there, but are properly dressed!

George Kuwa is right out in the open and is handling a good part. Caught him the other day, with the grease paint on.

Clyde Cook met with an accident the other day that caused his company to lay off. It got so serious that he decided to leave at once for "Bonesetter" Reese's home. This called for Clyde to journey to Youngstown, Ohio.

Harry Smith worked in the Tweedy Comedy last week.

Dorothy Vernon has been working with Jackie Coogan at the Goldwyn studios, where the starlet has been acting on the New York street. Dorothy loves kiddies any how, having appeared with all kinds of them in the Chester-Joe Martin and Napoleon comedies.

Penrhyn Stanlaws no more than finished an interior set than he and his company were on their way to San Francisco to make some scenes for "Singed Wings," which has Conrad Nagel, Ernest Torrance, Robert Brower and Adolphe Menjou aiding Bebe Daniels.

The Screen Writers' Page - Conducted by William E. Wing

Land of the Free

DURING the past week we have read four fiction stories in which the criminal cleverly got away with it—

Perused a magazine article which fully reveals the names and character of secret poisons, very difficult to detect after death; very educational for children—

Sauntered lightly through a novel filled with cold-blooded murder—

Visited the theater where there were many drinking scenes, some homicide and stabbings—

Gleaned from the daily press enough horrors to send children and weak women into hysterics—

Glanced through dispatches which called vivid attention to crimes in foreign nations, scandals—

Heard political speeches which reflected upon congress itself—

But, try to use one of these things in the terrible photoplay production, and something like a city block will fall upon you with great eclat!

Good Support

THE photoplay is no better than the mind at its source," says Editor James Quirk, in the latest issue of his publication.

His highly interesting editorial hits the ball on the nose, and should cause much serious pondering on the part of those who supply the money for screen productions.

The effective arraignment confirms Camera!'s declaration that "the manufacturer is no greater than his product."

This appeal from Brother Quirk for finer minds in the administrative chair strikes the vital spot. He does not see relief "until certain swivel chairs topple."

It is a foregone conclusion that more education and culture in the administration necessarily must add quality to an output wherein art and a deep understanding of human nature plays such a big part.

However, we do not concur with this editor if he intends to state that there has been a total loss of public faith for the screen.

True, at a number of places, the tide is flowing from the theater instead of into it. But there still is time to save the situation by substitution of education for ignorance, as suggested by Mr. Quirk.

The real saving thing in the whole threatening situation is the fact that there are good pictures; there are great pictures, and these still are appearing. A great industry cannot collapse and fail, when so much that is worthy still remains in its structure.

And Camera! still insists that there is good story material in the world, waiting to replace the poorer selections of the swivel chair.

Title Verdicts

THE damage which wrong or weak main titles do to picture productions, when in the market, is brought severely to mind by a perusal of the year book which contains critical comments from theater managers throughout the country.

These comments include, very frequently, the expressions and opinions of audiences also, and, therefore, are all the more valuable.

No writer should lose the opportunity to ponder the seriousness of this subject, and to seek further light upon a matter which may interfere with his success in marketing his best stories, not his mediocre product.

This is not a new subject. It has been aired frequently. But evidences that a cure still is needed are strikingly evident in the review book covering the year 1921.

In many cases the producing organizations are wholly to blame for misleading or ailing main titles. But this does not prevent the author from taking the matter seriously, and giving all the time necessary to discover a name for his photoplay which not only will reflect the depth of his theme, but will add dignity to the production, when it is shown upon the screen.

Then he should give battle to any studio which endeavors to change that title for a weaker one.

Color and Costume

PICTURE styles have changed since the time that municipalities builded their sidewalks very close to skirt bottoms.

Not long ago even the thought of the costume play, or foreign background, brought the shudder of horror, and the thinker mentally backed swiftly away from there.

But the colorful day is returning rapidly. Costumes of past ages are being welcomed. Quaint countries and people are deserting the travelogues for the film drama.

Therefore, the writer may allow his mind to expand once more to the broadest field of fancy. He may use once more all the pigment and shadings in painting his canvas, and no country is barred to him with the exception of that dear Mexico, where visualizing crime seems to be protected by a home copyright.

Perhaps the time has not arrived when the writer may dab freely with period stories. But he has the greater advantage, with the widening of his background, in taking his modern characters to the many countries where costuming and native are as picturesque and interesting as those of a century ago.

Colorful stories, which change locale frequently, including contrasty countries and populace, seem to be sought by quite a number of producers.

This is an outlet which writers will welcome with greatest relief. Canadian woodland, the wild and woolly west, the underworld and languid society set have done their best to dry up the old brain and bring on premature senility to the creative mind.

Let us, therefore, joyride afar, pleasantly using all the colors on the palette if necessary, while still preserving a perfect harmony.

Monthly Question Box

Dear Sir—Did you ever make a list of screen authors' names, I mean those signed to productions upon the screen? I copied about 100 of them from Camera! and found—what? I'd say that most of the screen plays are "inside jobs" dashed off by someone on the company's payroll. One-third of these names seem to be fictitious. I wonder who is hiding behind them, and why hiding? Is it possible for you to take up this subject in your department?

B. ALICE ALBERT.

I am of the opinion that you have not reached far enough into the general subject. Names on screens make little difference as to story values. The main query is as to who is making the poor selections for so many mediocre photoplays, especially from the printed page. And who is going to correct the evil?

Friend Wing—Tell us; how are writers able to slip over such aged plots on the magazines?

WHITTIER FAN.

Style—something which isn't worth a whoop so far as the screen is concerned.

Dear Sir—What is Hays going to do for the photoplay writer?

T. T. THOMPSON,

Santa Barbara.

Tell him to be a good boy, and to refrain from sending him (Hays) any of his scenarios.

Editor—I liked your article referring to the limitations put upon screen plays by the government and other governments. What can be done about it?

F. A. F.

Fight, if we can get a concerted movement upon the part of the manufacturers.

To B. P.—We cannot recommend that market.

To Shipman—The Authors' League of America has a very good contract form for authors.

Contemporary Criticisms

"QUEEN OF THE MOULIN ROUGE" (American)

"This elaboration has been done in most commendable fashion by the pair of capable writers who built up the scenario, Garfield Thompson and Peter Milne. They have made an interesting drama out of the material at hand, and one that keeps the spectator interested.

"Ray Smallwood, the director, has accomplished a fine piece of work in staging the piece. He has injected a realistic atmosphere of the Montmartre section of Paris that adds impetus to the story and lends a glamour that is agreeable. Smallwood was assisted in the technical direction by Ben Carre, a noted French director.

"The cast is headed by Martha Mansfield, who not only is pleasing in looks and personality, but draws a careful characterization. She is supported by a company that includes some fine types and able performers. The lighting and camera work is an advantageous feature of the film."

—Moving Picture World.

"... this picture is pre-eminently respectable, even to the point of being orthodox. Virtue has its own reward, the villains are foiled ... and the hero and heroine are all set at the end to live happy ever after.

"Also the queen is only a simple little country girl who comes to Paris because she wants to be a dancer, and the 'Moulin Rouge' is notorious only so far as the title makes it so.

"There is a lot of Apache atmosphere in the early part of the production ... a well constructed story and a number of sequences that carry plenty of suspense and interest."

—Motion Picture News.

"With exceedingly good continuity, capable acting, good direction and told amid elaborate settings the screen version of Paul Potter's well-known stage play stacks up, well as a cinema entertainment.

"Martha Mansfield, in the title role, plays easily, handling many dramatic scenes in a capital fashion, and always making her presence felt when on the screen. An excellent character bit is played by Joseph Stricker in the role of a music master, while Harry Harmon, Fred T. Jones and Tom Blake also help considerably in making the film a success.

"The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" is another example of a stage play being well adapted for the screen."

—Morning Telegraph.

"THE PRINCE AND THE PAUPER" (First National)

"... one of the best pseudo-historical pictures the cinema has produced ... the chief honors must be almost equally apportioned to the director and to the child star appearing in the dual role. ... Tibi Lubin, a young actor of many parts, and of whom one may predict with a certainty we shall hear more and even MORE anon.

"The work of titling the film has been excellently done by Julian Johnson and Randolph Bartlett, who have selected most of the captions judiciously from the Mark Twain text."

—Morning Telegraph.

"The present production is done on a rather pretentious scale and a youngster by the name of Tibi Lubin appears as the prince and the pauper. This Lubin child looks like a girl in some shots, but for the most part plays the two boys convincingly from the sex, if not from the dramatic, standpoint. Lubin is not skilled, and the director was obviously not capable of handling children.

"... one wishes that the human and whimsical passages that make the book a delight to young and old had been dealt with on the screen with a gentler and more subtle hand. Imagination seems to be lacking in this picture production.

"... Photographically the picture is passable ... many of the spoken titles were misplaced to the extent of a root or so, while the subtitles covering change in the phases of the story were poor. Francis Everth as Miles Herndon stands out in the supporting cast."

—Motion Picture News.

"The settings are exquisite and so well chosen that it seems as though the picture must have had an English origin, but the names of the players lead one to conclude that it is a German or Austrian production.

"... this foreign production also should score a success mainly because of the boy's acting and the beauty of the sets. ... The film does drag slightly in the middle, but without lasting injury to the story.

"Francis Everth and Francis Herter are effective in their roles, while Alfred Schreiber, as King Henry VIII, is satisfactory."

—Moving Picture World.

"NICE PEOPLE" (Paramount)

"'Nice People' is a thoroughly entertaining picture with a purpose. ...

the film points a definite moral lesson, and is far more effective in this than ninety per cent of the pictures making the same attempt. The reason is that priggishness has not been confused with morality.

"... An expert scenario by Clara Beranger makes the dramatic construction smooth and logical.

"De Mille has mounted the story appropriately, injecting the right atmosphere and using lavishness in good taste in the frequent places necessary to compare the wealth of the so-called fast young set around which the plot revolves. But one of the chief features in the success of the picture is the performance contributed by Bebe Daniels as 'Teddy' Gloucester. ... Wallie Reid is convincing. ... Conrad Nagel is excellent as the fortune hunting but not mean or bad young man."

—Moving Picture World.

"The cabaret scenes are a la Japanese and unusually lavish. ... The American costume ball and 'taxeaux are the last word in beauty. The night party is very realistic. These scenes and those which follow in the country home ... are not for the eyes of our unsophisticated populace."

—Motion Picture News.

"This screen version of Rachel Crother's stage play is a well directed picture with fine settings, handsome photography, presented by a cast of unusual strength, and gives every indication of proving a popular success.

"Wallace Reid scores a decided hit in the character of hero Billy Wade, giving an energetic portrayal of the frank, wholesome ex-soldier lad. Bebe Daniels is prettily fascinating as the wilful 'Teddy,' a heavier role than she is in the habit of filling, but whose emotional demands she is fully equal to.

"The continuity is smooth and the action fast."

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"A better picture than the good play it's made from. Satire, comedy, drama blended in William De Mille's incomparably deft composition.

"The theory that 'nice people' simply do not do un-nice things is at once exploded and established. The incidents working out this comfortable miracle make up a great story about people everybody knows. Everybody will like the picture if they like pictures and are conscience free."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"THE MASQUERADER" (First National)

"To debate upon the 'Masquerader,' as far as merit and quality are concerned, would be foolish. That it stands well up among the screen's best productions is free from doubt. ... Filled with equality as many tense moments as the play, the picture is one that will live long in the memory of any audience, as well as widely advertise itself through the medium of satisfied patrons.

"It need not be said that the acting of Guy Bates Post is masterful—any more than a New Yorker need be informed that 'Babe' Ruth is in a batting slump. The screen has magnified the dignity which graced the actions of Mr. Post on the stage. Words need not be spoken—a clever director has seen to that end of the production, with the result that the picture is a complete chain of thought and events, harmonizing to the most minute detail.

"It is a production, so near perfection, that detailed criticism is a waste of time."

—Motion Picture News.

"Undoubtedly one of the season's best pictures, 'The Masquerader,' which scored such a decided success as a legitimate attraction, promises to win as great, if not greater, popularity through the medium of the screen. The work of Guy Bates Post is an artistic treat, but he is supported by a rare aggregation of dramatic talent, the photography represents the very acme of camera skill and James Young has directed the feature with unerring accuracy of detail, fine technique and admirable judgment."

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Beside Post making his first film appearance, Richard Walton Tully is introduced as a producer. Picture producers will make no hesitancy in claiming both welcome to the fold. Tully displays with his initial endeavor that he is capable of transferring his ideas of theatrical showmanship to the screen. ...

"A minor change in it brings the story up to date. With the decidedly strong foundation furnished by the author of the book and John Hunter Booth, who wrote the play, James Young, the director, has fashioned a production that is artistically mounted and unfolds the tale in a tempo that builds up the interest. Among the technical faults the most outstanding is the presence of entirely too many spotlights singling out the characters and especially the star."

—Moving Picture World.

GREEN ROOM CLUB New York City

Our Travelogue

Mrs. Owen Moore, known to screen fans as Kathryn Perry, has left for a brief trip to New York, where she will spend time in the various modistes along Fifth Avenue in search of the latest creations in fall gowns and millinery.

Jack Pickford and his bride, Marilyn Miller, left Los Angeles on the California Limited August 23, arriving in New York via the Twentieth Century Limited.

Rodolpho Valentino is expected in New York, and would have been there in time for his "Blood and Sand" if the striking railroad men had not detained him.

Helene Chadwick departed on the crest of the Los Angeles heat wave last Saturday for the desert region of Arizona, where she expects to be for the next two weeks. She will be playing the leading feminine role in the Morosco-Hawks production.

The Talmadges arrived in New York and after a short stay here left for Europe. Mamma Talmadge accompanied them while they looked over the town.

Accompanied by Buster Senior and Mrs. Keaton, Joseph Talmadge Keaton expects to leave for New York September 15 for a couple of months toy-shopping in the eastern metropolis.

While the family hope is doing this his pa will sign a new contract to continue producing frozen-faced comedies.

Edward Sloman left Hollywood this week for New York to arrange for distribution of "Blind Justice." After completing business in the east, Sloman plans to go to London to visit his mother, whom he has not seen for twelve years.

Christopher Worthington of Camera!'s staff is on his way to South America in search of adventure. He will inform Camera! readers of film matters and film persons he meets.

Homeward Bound

Upon her return from Truckee, where she journeyed to appear opposite Buster Keaton in his latest First National comedy, Phyllis Haver will return to the Sennett Studio, where F. Richard Jones is getting ready for her first starring vehicle.

The return of Mabel Normand from Europe is expected before October 1st.

The "Passions of the Sea" company, directed by R. A. Walsh and having House Peters, Pauline Starke and Antonio Moreno in leading roles, last week left Tahiti, homeward bound, ending a two months' absence from the studio, during which they were most successful.

Others in the cast are Mary Jane Irving, Rosemary Theby, George Siegmann, William V. Mong and Carl Harbaugh. Myrtle Lind and Wm. Haines accompanied as understudies.

Howard P. Bretherton is cutting "One Week of Love," the latest of the Selznick all-star productions, which is being directed by George Archainbaud, and which has Conway Tearle and Elaine Hammerstein in the leading roles.

Along the Rialto

John Emerson and Anita Loos, his wife, are due in New York—after spending four months abroad.

"The Prince and The Pauper," Mark Twain's wondrous story of days long past, filled the largest theatre on Broadway every night during its week run. The Capitol enhanced the picture with a balanced program of dance, song and music.

The Philharmonic Orchestra here in New York begins a series of twelve concerts with Conductor Stransky at the helm. The Metropolitan Opera House has been chosen to house the splendid orchestra.

"Nice People," following in the path of Los Angeles, is playing to appreciative audiences at the Rialto.

William Faversham makes his debut as a vaudeville artist in New York at B. F. Keith's Palace.

Others of rare box office attraction playing New York's vaudeville houses are Lou Tellegen, Fritzi Scheff and Langdon McCormick.

Langdon McCormick's "The Storm" is playing the Keith chain of theatres as a one-act sketch of rare interest.

"Six Cylinder Love," with Ernest Truax, leaves Broadway and goes to Chicago for an indefinite run. It played over a year on Broadway.

Theda Bara's first picture for Seznick will be made here in the East.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" is playing the Astor Theatre with great success. It is now entering its fourth week.

Lasky's Eastern Studio, at Long Island City, will be working at full blast in a few days. At this writing Tom Gerehty is getting things ready.

"Rich Men's Wives," with its all-star cast, is to run in the Capitol. It is said several Broadway managers vied for this picture.

"Forget Me Not," the Metro production, with Bessie Love and Gareth Hughes, is continuing to play the Criterion with success.

week's successful playing to capacity audiences. The famous, though seldom used, sign S. R. O., continues to hang nightly at this theatre.

"Partners Again," the latest Potash and Perlmutter success, is now in its 4th month on Broadway. It played throughout the hot summer months. Barney Bernard, Alexander Carr and Lee Kohlmar are the chief fun-makers.

Lee Kohlmar, who plays a prominent part in "Partners Again," used to direct Gladys Walton and others at Universal City.

Buffalo first run theatres usually follow in the wake of New York City. What is now in Buffalo is second run in Los Angeles and New York City.

"Blood and Sand" played two weeks at the Rivoli, and on two occasions crowds were three deep, standing in the rain.

"Human Hearts" played four weeks in the Central Theatre. The house was sold out the first two weeks.

"The Storm" played the Capitol, New York's largest theatre, for one week, and then played the Central for two more weeks.

"Sherlock Holmes," with John Barrymore, is in its 8th week in the Cameo Theatre, a house owned by B. S. Moss. The picture had its premier in the Capitol, and after playing there one week was transferred.

Guy Bates Post's "The Masquerader" is playing Broadway in the Strand Theatre. This is Mr. Post's first screen appearance.

William Fox's "Count of Monte Cristo" reached Broadway and the general criticism was very favorable. The house was sold out three days before opening night. The picture will run indefinitely.

The Shubert interests will take over the Central Theatre the early part of September, and use the house for their vaudeville.

"The Son of the Wolf," with Edith Roberts and Wheeler Oakman, is running at the Mark Strand of Buffalo.

Loew's State, here, is playing "Across the Border," with Betty Compson. Vaudeville and first run pictures is the policy of this house.

Lon Chaney's "The Trap" will play Buffalo's Pallace Theatre for an indefinite run.

"The Right That Failed," Bert Lytell's fighting-ring Metro classic, plays the Mark Strand. The story is adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story.

A Constance Talmadge revival, "The Primitive Lover," will play Buffalo at the Elmwood theatre. Revivals are popular in this city.

Thomas Meighan in "If You Believe It, It's So" comes to Shea's North Park Theatre for one week run.

The Majestic Theatre, a stock company house, opens September 4th with a version of "The First Year," and will be followed by the "Czarina" and others of huge success on New York's Broadway.

Loew's State plays "The Man Unconquerable" with Jack Holt for a whole week. Vaudeville of merit likewise shares honors with the silver screen.

Story By

The story of "Kick In" originally was produced for the legitimate stage by its author, Willard Mack. It has been elaborated by Ouida Bergere for the screen.

Jules Verne's adventures suggested "Around the World in Eighteen Days," Universal's next chapter play.

The story is being written by Carl Coodlidge under the supervision of Bob Dillion, serial and short reel feature editor at Universal City. J. P. McGowan will direct.

"Under Oath" was written by Eddie Montagne and directed by George Archainbaud. This is the same combination which was responsible for the highly successful Hammesstein picture, "Evidence."

W. A. Orland is playing at the Metro studios under direction of Irvin Willat.

Olga Printzlau having finished her continuity on F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," has started work on an original story, also for Warner Brothers titled "Little Church Around the Corner."

Adeline Alvord has moved her play and story brokerage offices to new and larger quarters. She reports an increasing business.

BIOGRAPHIST SUES GOLDWYN

Writing autobiographies for noted persons is the literary occupation disclosed by a New York suit against Samuel Goldwyn filed by Will A. Page.

Page was to write "The Mirrors of the Screen" or "Behind the Screen," based on Goldwyn's life, and being virtually a history of the motion pictures. The two were to split 50-50 on the price for serial publication and on book royalties, Page claims.

Then, Page charges, the publicity men got busy, the world learned about the book, and advisers told Goldwyn how many copies could be sold. The producer boosted his price and planned to pay a newspaper man $75 a week to write the book, Page says.

Cutting Up

Fox Studio

...R. S. Fischer is cutting "St. Elmo," which was directed by Jerome Storm and photographed by Joe August.

Bernard Wolf is cutting "Bells of San Juan," directed by Scott Dunlap, photographed by J. D. Jennings and starring Buck Jones.

Clyde Caruthers is chief cutter of Fox comedies. He is aided by Milton Caruthers, Jean Prevedi and Tom Vincent.

F. V. Biggay is superintendent of the laboratories. He is assisted by Henry Goldfarb.

Sol M. Wurtzel is boss of the situation at Fox. After every one else has done his part Wurtzel puts the final O. K. on the picture before it is shipped to New York.

Louis Seiler is the power behind the comedy lot who knows what New York wants, and it is his duty to see that the fun-making films meet with all studio requirements and with what the censors allow.

EDWARD M. KIMBALL

Edward M. Kimball, actor, and father of Clara Kimball Young, was one of the originators of the Ringling Brothers Circus, at that time known as the Ringling Brothers Classic & Comic Concert Company. He went into dramatic stock in Philadelphia, afterwards going to Seattle, where he played for one and a half years. Later he was in St. Paul, Chicago and New York City, and then played in musical comedy. "What Happened to Mary" was his last stage appearance.

He has been in motion pictures for eleven years, his first part being with the Vitagraph company. He has been with Will Rogers in several pictures, and of late has been appearing with Guy Bates Post. Probably his best known roles have been in the Clara Kimball Young pictures, "Mid-Channel," "Charge It," "For the Soul of Rafael" and "Eyes of Youth." He is now preparing to work in the Garson picture, "Old Jed Prouty," in which he is to be featured. This is an adaptation from the well-known play by Richard Golden, and Mr. Kimball's portrayal will be awaited with great interest and enthusiasm.

Releases from Broadway

By Raymond McKee

Guy Empey, the once upon a time movie actor, is "doing vaudeville." He is assisted by June Houghton, the champion rifle shot of the U. S. A.

Harry Meyers returned from Germany last Wednesday, and is leaving at once for Hollywood. Between jumps, Harry is eating "FRIAR BLUE PLATE DINNERS," and the rest of the time he spends boosting Germany's stock. He says a wonderful dinner can be had there for FIVE MARKS. That is equivalent to, let's see? Well! One hundred marks are now selling for one cent. Figure it out.

John Davidson, late heavy man from the . A. stock house, also the Lasky lot, is back among his "Green Room Club" playmates, but his heart is still in Hollywood.

Raymond McKee has signed to replace Johnny Hines in the Torchy comedies. They will be called "All Star" pictures. Charlie Murry, Flora Finch, Mary Anderson and others will romp with him throughout the series. "Farewell, sunny California, for a while," says Raymond.

John Stephens, Pearl White's stunt man, was killed the other day. The stunt was a leap from the top of a Fifth Avenue bus to the girder of the Sixth Avenue elevated structure. Stephens was dressed in a costume duplicating that of the star, and a blonde wig. He missed the structure and fell thirty feet below to the street. He died several hours later in the Roosevelt Hospital.

Will Rogers has just completed his picture, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow." Commenting on "NITE LIFE" in Hollywood, Will admits that during his long stay there not once did he see any display of rowdiness. "I wasn't invited anywhere," finishes Bill.

Robert Edeson, from Cherokee Avenue, is back in New York playing a light comedy part in Del Henderson's all-star picture "Sure Fire Flint." He and Raymond McKee are at the same studio, The Mirror, Glendale, L. I. Both are from the same street in Hollywood. They are losing no time between scenes telling the place and each other how they miss Hollywood.

FIGHTS BLUE LAW WITH BLUE LAWS

When the ministerial association of Piqua, O., took steps to close theaters on Sunday by arresting proprietors under the state law, the mayor decided to be consistent. He issued a proclamation calling for strict enforcement of all blue laws.

"I expect to keep everything — gasoline stations, groceries, etc., shut up on Sunday until the ministers relax in their attitude and permit the poor man to enjoy his picture show on Sunday," Mayor DeWeese said.

Newspapers were not printed, nor permitted to enter the town on Sunday, and a Dayton reporter was arrested for "working" in gathering facts for a story on the first blue Sunday in Piqua.

Must Refund Film Capital

Investigation is under way of the Rellimeo Film syndicate, which sought $1,000,000 to produce psychological pictures under direction of Dr. Orlando Edgar Miller. Dr. Miller sold $800,000 worth of stock, and the money is in escrow. He has been instructed by the state corporation commission to return the money collected, minus 20 per cent sales expense.

In the Ring With Toreador

If there really is a patent due on double-exposure, it should go to the bathing girl who first went the "Black Crook" chorus lady one better.

Some Do

"Where are you going, my pretty script?"
"Going to the studio, sir," it yipped;
"What'll you do when you get there?"
"Start the editor tearing his hair."

Anyway, the independent can remain that way as long as the bankroll holds out.

ISN'T A SPECIAL MESSAGE ABOUT DUE FROM MR. HAYS?

There was a girl arrested this week who did not say she was a movie actress. She was a mute.

"The Top of New York" is playing in New York. At a roof-garden, mebbe.

Motion picture stars should remember that titles of films they play in may be held against them.

First picture passed by the new Virginia board of censors was "Sawing a Woman in Half." Couldn't do much cutting on that one.

WEEKLY EXPLOITATION HINT "Blood and Sand"

Go to the stock market, pick out the ugliest bull in sight, and have him starved for a week. The day your picture opens, tie your bull outside the firehouse. Now turn in a double fire alarm for your theater. When the fire chief speeds out in his red auto the bull will charge after him, probably attracting attention of pedestrians. When they reach your theater the firemen will have forgotten about the alarm, as they will be trying to calm the bull, and a goodly crowd will have gathered in your lobby. Just open the doors and they will all rush in.

The P. A.'s Friends

A new pictorial syndicate, Pacific and Atlantic Photos, Inc., has appointed Linton Wells coast manager, with his office with G. A. Fowler, photographer, 520 South Broadway.

The Motion Picture Review is a 20-page fan monthly published by Macon Publishing company, New York, and sold to one theater in a city for free fan distribution with local insert.

The Bethlehem (Pa.) Sun will appear morning and weekly in November. The daily will appeal to working men; the weekly to farmers.

Charles W. Canfield, dramatic critic of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, spent his vacation in a New York hospital with a broken leg.

Eric Collins is motion picture editor of the Miami (Fla.) Herald, in addition to being staff photographer.

The Miami Movie Magazine, to be launched this month, has Raymond B. Bolton, manager of the Miami Post, as managing editor and general manager.

W. Ward Marsh, motion picture editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, acquired a son August 5.

The Seattle American will print its first edition about September 15. It will be a tabloid afternoon paper.

"Defender" Appears For Film Folk

A new weekly magazine, "The Defender," will make its newsstand bow in Hollywood Saturday, September 9. Its purpose is to interest the public in the character and motives of the men and women of pictures.

D. E. Davenport, veteran press agent and magazine editor, is publisher and editor. Davenport edited "Photoplay Journal" for four years, was general press representative of the Chuberts four years and more recently was in the Pickford-Fairbanks publicity department. He now is a freelance publicity writer.

Harvey Evans is his associate editor on "The Defender."

School Day Essays

IN grammar school days our favorite topic of holiday essays was: "Is the world growing better or worse?"

And 10- and 12-year-olds would discuss the sins and virtues of a wide world they had not seen and knew not of.

Now the topic has been changed by time. It is: "Are motion pictures becoming better or worse?"

The debaters are not children, but grown-up persons. Yet they have as little knowledge of motion pictures as the children had of the world.

The discussions are solemn and full of sounding phrases, yet seldom do they show more insight than the dictionary-groomed essays of school days.

The merits of pictures are the merits of the world. Good pictures mingle with bad pictures. Good people mingle with bad people.

It is not for us to grieve that some are bad; it is up to us to work to make more good.

Screen Credit for Risks

THE double, who risks his life to gain hero-worshippers for a star, has received credit for his daring in at least one film.

Hal Martin, double, was seriously injured in diving from the mast of a ship at sea for a scene in "A Sailor Tramp," produced in England. In tribute his name was used on the screen.

In the past year one or two doubles have lost their lives or have been severely hurt in performing feats for American stars.

Perhaps, occasionally, some American star may share a small portion of the credit with the man who takes his risk for him.

The Sword We Sell

WHILE the Anti-Saloon league machinery is being oiled up for motion picture censorship, the Bone Dry federation of California declares it intends to use the screen to further propaganda in behalf of the Volstead act and the eighteenth amendment.

"People won't listen to speeches, won't read 'literature,' won't stay put in political parties. For every voter who does do one of these things, one thousand see motion pictures."

There's the professional reformer's admission of the power of the screen.

Maybe some day we'll use our own power for ourselves.

Electric-Light Success

SAYS Nellie Revell, the cheery prisoner of a plaster cast, in one of her "Bed-side Chats" for Variety:

"Last week when I promised I wasn't going to put Eddie Cantor's name in my column again I forgot that I wanted to tell you this story about him: I remarked that I was so glad to see that his success had not spoiled him. 'Listen, Nellie,' he said, 'no little electric sign is going to run away with me. When I first saw my name in electric lights I, of course, was happy and proud, but I soon reflected that a five-cent chewing gum had an electric sign 20 times larger than mine and so I determined to keep my head. Whenever I feel that there is danger of my becoming conceited I go and stand near that enormous chewing gum sign and it has an effect on me the advertising never intended.'"

Film Capital Production Notes

SECOND LARRY EVANS STORY

Casting for another big special production will be started by B. P. Schulberg within a few days, according to an announcement from Preferred Pictures.

Larry Evans' unique story, "Are You A Failure?" probably will reach the world through the agency of the screen before it becomes a stage production, or is seen on the printed page.

Dick Hatton is getting ready to start another five-reel western feature, such as he has been making for the past year for a number of different interests.

Watch! Wait! Read the Writers' Issue.

A. E. Smith is holding a meeting back East which is expected to show important results for the local studio of the Vitagraph company. Word ought to be along soon to start Alice Calhoun, Corrine Griffith and Jimmy Aubrey. This will mean that Vitagraph will have six companies working here under W. S. Smith.

Max Linder may not be able to produce his widely heralded nine-reel feature in France on account of the lack of studio facilities. It is indicated that he will return to Los Angeles at an early date and resume his production activities here.

Watch the writing in the Writers' Issue.

The A. B. Maescher productions have started work at the Hollywood studios. Harry L. Keepers, prominent cinematographer, will handle the camera work, while Jack Pratt wields the megaphone. It has been some time since these two have been together.

Earle Williams opened production at Vitagraph this week of a new script entitled, "You Never Know."

Coming soon—the Writers' Issue.

AT FINE ARTS

The management of the Fine Arts studios this week announced the addition of two new producing units. Sanford Productions, starring Pete Morrison in feature westerns, was the first company to be assigned production quarters with G. M. "Broncho Billy" Anderson heading the second company to enter the studios. Six companies are now working at Fine Arts.

Production will commence this week on a seven-reel dramatic feature to be made by the Fine Arts studios under the direction of Nat Deverich, president of the plant. The picture will be produced with an all-star cast, composed of several screen luminaries.

Watch for the Writers' Issue.

Allen Holubar has just finished a production of "Broken Chains," the $10,000 prize story.

Maurice Tourneur is now putting the finishing touches to Hall Caine's great story, "The Christian," which was filmed partly in London and the Isle of Man.

The first important move made by Halperin Productions in producing "Tea—With a Kick," is the importation of Irene D'Annelle, noted dancer, from the roof of the Century Theater where she is now presenting several original numbers in the Chauve-Souris.

D'Annelle is expected to leave for Hollywood within a few days. On her arrival here she will begin rehearsals immediately for the new production. She will compose novelty solos and will also train and direct the large ballet.

Get in your ad for the Writers' Issue immediately.

He has accomplished more than most juvenile men. Jack Donovan is a clever architect as well as an interior decorator.

With arrangements just completed for a series of Leah Baird special productions to be made for Associated Exhibitors under an agreement between Arthur S. Kane and Arthur F. Beck, her manager, the first special already is well under way on the lot of the Thomas H. Ince studio.

Miss Baird, who wrote her own scenario for this picture from a four-act play, "All Mine," is being supported by a trio of favorite leading men: Richard Tucker, Walter McGrail and Tom Santchi. The story is woven about some interesting situations that arise following a shipwreck in the South Sea Isles. Wallace Worsley is directing the picture with Arthur Todd as camera man.

Something different—the Writers' Issue.

Eva Novak has finished two separate pictures for Lasky at the same time. She has been working with Tommy Meighan and Jack Holt.

SELZNICK PICTURES FORMING ADDITIONAL PRODUCTION UNIT

The Selznick Pictures Corporation are about to resume production in the East.

A new production unit will be in addition to the one now operating on the Pacific Coast in charge of Myron Selznick, President of Selznick Pictures Corporation.

The first picture to be made in the East under the new arrangement will be the big special starring Theda Bara, which will mark that internationally known player's return to the screen after an absence of almost two years.

For the past several years all of the pictures carrying the Selznick trade mark have been produced by Myron Selznick.

Mr. Selznick, who is at present located at the United studios at Hollywood where for the past few weeks he has been working on other production matters with Myron Selznick, will leave within a month for New York, where he will immediately start the filming of the big Theda Bara subject.

All production made by the David Selznick unit, as with those made by the unit headed by Myron Selznick, will be distributed by the Select Pictures Corporation. The Theda Bara production will be made in time for early fall release.

Charles Seeling Productions are starting production at the Fine Arts studios on a big Chinese story. Bessie Love, Edward Peil, Bert Sprotte, Priscilla Bonner and James B. Leong are in the cast.

STEREOSCOPIC METHOD OF EXHIBITION

Considerable discussion has been held regarding the effect the stereoscopic method of exhibition will have upon the film business in general and the public, since the Perfect Pictures have announced the completion of their special feature production, "The Power of Love," which will be road showed throughout the country with the stereoscopic method of exhibition. The idea of stereoscopic has been tried many times without success but this company can project and show their picture in any theater in the United States regardless of distance of projection or size of house. They have commercialized this remarkable advancement. The effect this will have on the general public of seeing the realistic picture instead of the ordinary flat picture will no doubt create a sensation, as this seems to be the opportune moment to give the public something new and different.

The Writers' Issue will soon be here.

Rupert Hughes, who has just finished the direction of "Gimme," which he wrote in collaboration with Mrs. Hughes, and of his photoplay, "The Bitterness of Sweet," is now making a screen adaptation of his novel, "Souls For Sale," which will be his next production.

Lew Lipton is forming a company to produce a series of comedies. He will be general manager of the organization, write original scripts and supervise the titling of the subjects.

Current Reviews

"Manslaughter"

THE cold fact that an outpouring of money cannot save a production suffering the fatal defect of a trite, hokum conclusion, again is illustrated in C. B. DeMille's latest effort, "Manslaughter."

Alice Duer Miller wrote an interesting and rather absorbing fiction story under this title. The DeMille arrangement and production is interesting up to the turn in the tale. Then the entire thing falls flat, becomes common, and ruins the effect of the picture.

The production as presented by DeMille, is a double-barreled affair. The main story, which defies logic, is about the district attorney who loves an heiress madly.

The secondary story, or whatever it is intended to be, is a trifle vague in meaning. It consists of far-fetched scenes from salacious Rome, about the time it was skidding.

When the modern story tumbles into the ditch about the time the audience expects a worthy conclusion, gorgeous sets, and the wild doings of a Roman holiday do not save it.

The question arises whether these scenes were forced into the picture for fear that one clean production, at least, might be charged to this director?

The logic of "Manslaughter" will not stand analysis, but this alone would not kill the production so far as the public is concerned.

Leatrice Joy, the heiress, found guilty of manslaughter by the jury, but never by the audience, triumphs over situations fraught with pitfalls for any but a finished actress. She is a master of repression, and an artist in emotion.

Thomas Meighan, as the district attorney, is forced to do things which no normal man would perform. That Mr. Meighan manages to work his way through without loss of prestige is to his credit. He certainly is tried by fire.

Lois Wilson, as the maid who goes to prison, to be joined by her mistress, does splendid work and aids not a little in holding up the worthy scenes of the story.

Despite the worthy efforts of this capable trio, it is the reviewer's opinion that the most effective situation of the entire production, so far as the human note is concerned, are the scenes between Jack Mower, as the speed cop, and Julia Faye, who plays his wife, before his death.

If other values in the DeMille production were equal to these, "Manslaughter" would have no adverse criticisms.

And yet neither this great cast nor the mad money spasm saves "Manslaughter" from its flagrant failings, or the concluding episodes which earn their own verdict of "guilty."

R. W.

"The Masquerader"

RICHARD WALTON TULLY and Guy Bates Post defied all motion picture traditions when they produced "The Masquerader," for the screen from a stage play of long standing. Guy Bates Post plays a dual role, and throughout the film he forgets that the camera is where the audience ought to be. In the straight part, although camera conscious, he is better than in the role of John Chilcote where he overacts sadly.

It is here that we must mention the marvelous photography. The double exposing is carried out so well that it appears to be the impossible accomplished.

Barbara Tennant plays a slave part interestingly. Her work is so well done that it shows up other feminine acting in the cast.

Ruth St. Clair is beautiful and wears clothes well but she is rather selfconscious.

Marcia Manon looks and acts like a 1918 edition of the famous movie vamp of that period. Her overacting is torture to behold.

Edward Kimball may now be numbered among the leading character actors of the screen for the fine performance he gives here as the faithful butler.

James Young directed "The Masquerader" with genius strokes but was somewhat hampered by stagey cast.

R. W.

"Her Gilded Cage"

IT is rather awkward to see Gloria Swanson try to play Mae Murray stuff. It is true that Miss Swanson can wear gowns to good advantage, but when she starts wearing abbreviated ones her acting cannot match up with the effulgence that the costume calls for.

Elmer Harris wrote "The Gilded Cage" from a stage play by that name and Percy Heath adapted it for the screen. Whether the damage was done in the rewriting or the scenarizing is hard to tell. But somewhere in transit the real story was lost and a very poor substitute reached the screen.

Sam Wood has deMilleized the production. He has over-dressed the sets and made them exaggerated to the point of being trashy. His direction is average.

The photography is beautiful and a great redeemer to the picture.

David Powell plays his role with sincerity and effort. His work is excellent.

Anne Cornwall, as the lame sister, has a small unsympathetic part, which she plays unoffensively.

Charles Stevenson is a splendid old character actor as he shows here.

Harrison Ford is submerged with only a few scenes to help him out. He makes a brave struggle and wins a bit of admiration.

Walter Hiers as the fresh American press agent was at his best.

R. W.

In our review of "Kindred of the Dust" in last week's issue, we failed to mention the excellent portrayal contributed by John Herdman as Caleb Brent, father of Nan. This was one of the outstanding characterizations of the picture and Mr. Herdman's acting was a thing of great beauty and sincerity. Numerous favorable comments have been made on this part, and we are to have the pleasure of seeing more of his work in the near future.

"Just Tony"

WE have seen many "clothes horses" starred in productions that cannot act, act, not even with a good story, but Tony, a real horse and a real actor, is a star without even a story to back him in "Just Tony." It is a thoroughly entertaining film and far more interesting than a great many pretentious ones. The whole atmosphere and slight story breathes freedom.

There are human actors in the story, but Tony out-troups them. Even Tom Mix retires in favor of Tony when a close-up is due.

Of the humans, Dan Clarke, the cameraman, deserves greatest credit. The scenes on the plains and in the hills are soul-satisfying pictures.

The picture is good for screen students to think on. It is worth studying because it tackles entertainment from a new angle—not because of structural merit. Lynn Reynolds, the director, deserves praise; he did the best he could with the inferior continuity prepared by Lynn Reynolds, the adaptor of Max Brand's novel, "Alcatraz."

R. W.

"Omar, the Tentmaker"

A PRODUCTION viewed in the rough cannot be justly criticized. However, "Omar, the Tentmaker," though incomplete, stands high on the scale of production. This second Richard Walton Tully-Guy Bates Post combination has profited greatly by the mistakes in the first offering, "The Masquerader." Although Post is still a bit exaggerated in action he has entered into the spirit of pictures and has become a regular in the ranks. His splendid interpretation of Omar is just the sort of character that we liked to picture him when reading the Rubaiyat many years ago.

The next in line for credit is the camera and laboratory work. Here is a most important co-operation many times overlooked. George Benoit was the master mind back of the camera. He paints pictures with his lightings and soft tones. Then there is the tinting that makes the photography complete.

The continuity of cutting is almost mechanically perfect.

All these things make one feel gracious toward this silent drama—but the story—there is the catch. It shuttles from drama to hokum and back. The plot has many inconsistencies and is chronologically inaccurate.

Direction by James Young has the same solid foundation as his former productions.

Virginia Brown Faire has the feminine lead. She has a certain amount of oriental beauty and graceful ability.

Patsy Ruth Miller has a small part which she portrays well.

Boris Karloff is splendid in an old character role.

Douglas Gerard capably plays the heavy. Edward Kimball is also a reliable character who does excellent work.

Rose Dione, the French actress, plays a small emotional part well.

Evelyn Selby as the servant is well cast and does justice to the character.

Many others of talent have bits.

R. W.

Where to Find People You Know

Kid Wagner is working with Reginald Denny in the "Leather Pushers" series.

Director Gasnier is in the midst of the picturesque exterior scenes that mark his Special Picture for B. P. Schulberg from the Bertha M. Clay novel, "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." The company is working on a picturesque orange grove near Pasadena, where the scenes depicting Southern life in America are being shot.

"Buddy" Messenger, the 125 pounds of boy acting genius, has been signed by B. P. Schulberg to play the part of "Mista Bad Boy" in "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," being filmed under direction of Tom Forman. "Buddy" fits the part as if made to order.

Dan Mason portrays the character of a sleuth in the seventh of the series of Plum Center Comedies, now being filmed at the Paul Gerson studios in San Francisco, under the direction of Robert Eddy. Thomas Hendricks and Edward O'Brien play the chief supporting roles.

Johnny Jones, young star of the Johnny Jones comedies released through Pathe, is working on his fifth production which will be finished in a few days.

Nola Luxford has returned from San Francisco where she has been playing opposite Lawson Butt in "The Flying Dutchman."

Write! Write! Write! Watch the Writers' Issue.

Stan Laurel is the star of the newest story to be produced by Amalgamated Productions at the Fine Arts studios. Work on the picture will start this week under the direction of G. M. Anderson.

Clarence Burton is in the Paul Powell cast that features Agnes Ayres in "A Daughter of Luxury."

Joe Ray is cast for the Wallace Reid story that James Cruze is directing, playing the captain of a vessel.

Vernon Walker has been engaged to work for the Chas. Seeling Company, which have signed Bessie Love and an all-star cast. There is said to be thirty people who are to go to San Francisco to appear in some of the scenes. Walker is the cameraman on the job.

Emile Chautard has been engaged by Universal to direct an all-star dramatization of "Forsaking All Others," a magazine story by Mary Lerner.

Andree Tourneur, has been engaged to play opposite Roy Stewart in the Universal two-reel "Lumberjack" stories now being filmed under Robert Hill's direction at Fort Bragg, in Mendocino County, Cal.

"Drifting," William A. Brady's stage play of last season, has been bought by Universal. It is probable that it will be used as a starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean.

Edward Peil is playing the heavy with Tom Mix. He has also signed to play a Chinese heavy with the Seeling Feature Films, a part similar to the one he played in D. W. Griffith's "Dream Street" in which he scored so heavily.

By all means don't miss the Writers' Issue.

Tom McGuire is playing in the Jackie Coogan feature at the United studios.

Otis Harlan is cast in the William Farnum story now in the making at the Fox studios under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. Farnum goes with Jerome Storm in his next vehicle that he is to direct.

Allan Hale is to do the leading role opposite Shirley Mason, aided by George O'Hara, who has come over from the Sennett forces to play on the Fox lot.

"Kewpie" King has transported his two hundred and forty-three pounds to the Century studios where he will be seen in support of Lee Moran in the Century Comedy which Al Herman is now preparing.

Hoot Gibson has gathered a very capable cast in "Ridin' Wild," which is now under production. Gertrude Claire is playing his mother and William Welsh his father. Edna Murphy is his leading lady. Some clever character parts are taken by Don Bailey, Otto Hoffman and Joy Winthrop.

Harry De Roy is working with Larry Semon.

Marshall Neilan has engaged Dagmar Godowsky, daughter of the celebrated pianist and wife of Frank Mayo, to appear in his production, "The Strangers' Banquet," now being produced at the Goldwyn studio.

Louis Calhern opened at the Nora Bayes Theater, New York, in a new Shubert play called "East Side, West Side." As already stated in these columns Calhern has been engaged to play opposite Doris Keane in the "Czarina" for the coming season. He will probably open in the latter production next month and will then be compelled to terminate his engagement in the Shubert play.

Count Mario Caracciolo, late of the Italian diplomatic service at Washington, D. C., later of William Farnum's company in "Stage Romances" and still later a boon companion of his fellow-countryman, Monty Banks, has arrived in Hollywood to devote himself to enacting roles in photoplays. The Count is considered one of Italy's most talented actors.

Walter Emerson, now playing the important juvenile part in support of Henry B. Walthall in the William Fox production of "Drink," has just returned with Director Jack Ford from "location" work on Santa Cruz Islands.

Gaston Glass will play in a picture to be made by another concern before returning to the Goldwyn studios, where he has been playing the male lead in Rupert Hughes' "Gimme."

Pickups By The Staff

TELLS IT WITH MUSIC

While other directors may find the ever-ready megaphone an adequate agency for conveying their thoughts to screen players, Victor L. Schertzinger, just completing "The Lonely Road," in which Katherine MacDonald is starred, has a method that is proving far more effective.

For Mr. Schertzinger, who is as well known as a composer as screen director, tells it with the violin. Whenever a scene requires the "lifting up" that only music can supply, Victor L. Schertzinger makes use of the violin that brought him fame as a soloist with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. While directors on other stages are working with the aid of small orchestras, Schertzinger organizes himself into a one-man troupe and provides the music himself for "The Lonely Road," in which Katherine McDonald is starred.

Johnny Jones comedies, featuring Johnny Jones and Gertrude Messinger, have been booked with the California Theater by their producer, J. K. McDonald, at one of the highest prices ever secured for first-run two-reel kid pictures in Los Angeles theater history. The first picture of the production titled "Supply and Demand," was shown during the first week of September.

Reginald Barker had twenty cameramen, covered with asbestos, twenty Mexicans pouring three car loads of gasoline on a forest that it took the Louis B. Mayer company days to erect, a railroad spur laid, an engine running through six acres of burning pine trees at San Fernando with a forest fire raging, that was never equalled. Three truck loads of excelsior kept the fire going. Thrills galore and a number of real accidents was the lot of director Barker.

Coming soon—the Writers' Issue.

The Los Touras Country Club has opened the old Matthieson estate in the mountains near the Ventura-Los Angeles county line to location companies. It covers 90,000 acres of very beautiful country. Harry Keepers recently finished an exploitation picture for them there.

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN SCORING

Marcus Loew has found Elaine Hammerstein so tremendously popular with the patrons of his magnificent State theatre on Broadway, New York, that he has given every one of her pictures a pre-release showing at this house. The latest to be exhibited is "Under Oath" which is the current attraction at the State.

E. K. Fernandez is here from Honolulu, making arrangements to take some people to the Hawaiian Islands with him. He is about to close a proposition which will call for "Little Napoleon," the chimpanzee, and his trainer, Andre Anderson, making a tour of the islands. Should this arrangement be made, Anderson will close down his show at Long Beach.

Being a screen mother has its advantages. It brought Rose Rosanova to Hollywood by special demand.

A carnival of writing—the Writers' Issue, here soon.

Earle Williams has two directors handling him in his present story, Bert Ensinger and Dave Smith who are aided by Vincent McDermott and Fred Tyler, Gertrude Astor playing opposite Williams. The title of the story is "You'll Never Know" and deals with a society and underworld angle.

Something new in the way of transportation of motion picture film was put into effect by Douglas Fairbanks when Harry D. Buckley left Los Angeles to personally conduct the first print of Doug's film version of Robin Hood into New York.

The film is said to be insured for half a million dollars. Buckley, who is Doug's road show manager, will chaperon the film through the "trouble zone" in Chicago and conduct it into New York where arrangements will be made for showing it at a gigantic premiere in one of the legitimate theaters on Broadway. Buckley will establish headquarters in New York and following the opening of the Fairbanks version of Robin Hood, which is officially titled "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," will send out several road shows, each of which will have a personally chaperoned print of the picture.

GERSON MEMBER OF COMMITTEE

Paul Gerson, president of the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation, of San Francisco, is a member of the committee elected at the recent convention of M. P. T. O. A. of Northern California, held at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco, to form an organization that will represent and embody all branches of the motion picture industry.

As head of the only permanent film producing plant in San Francisco, Mr. Gerson represents the producing interests in the new association. The other members of the committee are prominent exhibitors and exchange managers.

The object of the new organization is primarily to handle all matters affecting the motion picture industry, to combat adverse legislation and censorship in any phase where the industry as a whole might suffer.

Harry Wilbur, proprietor of the Rialto Theater at Fullerton, Calif., has been awarded the $250 prize offered by Thomas H. Ince, the motion picture producer, for the best screen title for the film version of "Jim," a love and adventure story by Bradley King. Wilbur's entry was "What a Wife Learned."

Watch for the big writing blow-out, the Writers' Issue.

This has been an exciting week for the Hoot Gibson company filming "Ridin' Wild." Three of the company, Edna Murphy, the feminine lead, Wilfred Taylor, who plays her father, and a "prop" man had accidents all in one day. The auto in which Miss Murphy was riding was run into by another machine and overturned, but Miss Murphy suffered only a shaking up. Wilfred Taylor was almost run over while on his way to the studio and escaped with a mangled hand. The "prop" man was removing a large mirror from a truck when a machine ran into him and sent him crashing through the mirror. The mirror was smashed to atoms but the man escaped without serious injury.

The Writers' Issue will be the forerunner of a bigger, better CAMERA! Wait for it, here soon.

THAT TITLE

Many readers have asked whether Camera! had coined a new word or was launching a guessing contest after reading the title of last week's cover picture.

We apologize for unwittingly whetting curiosities; the title should have been "The Counterfeiter."

Wait for the Writers' Issue—the big literary fiesta.

Larry Semon does most of his own cutting of his comedies, with A. A. Jordan giving him a lifting hand whenever it is needed. Larry has Tom Buckingham directing him at present and Joe Basil is Larry's right hand man.

Chatter of Southland Folks - By.... Harry Burns

Fontaine La Rue, having enjoyed a brief vacation, is now ready to get busy once more. She has deserted comedies for the more serious line of acting.

Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Vernon have moved to the beach for a rest until the Christie funster gets a call from the studio to start another picture.

Harry Pollard has started another one of those Leather Pushers stories. This time it deals with a small town circus and a bully that Reginald Denny cleans up. Plenty of small town characters appear as atmosphere.

Lucile Young has been cast to appear in the James Cruze feature that is being made at the Lasky studios.

Jack Richardson's pet dog has proved himself a hero. When an autoist was backing his car up, a small child toddled out in the path of the machine. The dog, seeing this, rushed out and dragged the child out of harm's way. This was viewed by some of Jack's neighbors who told him about the happening.

Alf E. Greene is getting to be a real commuter. Every now and then when he finishes a picture, he takes a flyer East, the last time to show George Ade his original story of "The Leading Citizen." To whom he is going now is a mystery.

Ward Lascelle returned from Riverside where he has been shooting some racing scenes at the Riverside Fair Grounds. One of the autos turned over while another went through the fence.

Arthur Currier is working with Monty Banks, who is being directed by Ward Hayes at the Berwillia studios. The story deals with a boarding house, pawnshop, and prize-fight arena. Buddy Ross is aiding Hayes on gags and stories, while Mark Goldaine is alternating on the direction of the funsters.

William Fairbanks is to start another picture about the second of next month with Louis King once more directing his five-reel western story. They will do most of their filming in the hills along the Ridge route.

Alfred Gosden is photographing the Bobby Dunn comedies. Gosden has held six jobs in the last 24 years as a photographer, starting with the Kinemacolor company in London when he shot still pictures.

Bobby Dunn had a birthday the other day and Slim Summerville helped him celebrate it. The boys called in some of our best picture people and had a jolly good time, even if Bobby was too shy to tell his right age.

Frank Cavender has been looking after the offices of the Anchor Distributing company in the absence of Morris R. Schlank who is in New York City in the interests of the firm.

Ray Reis has been working for the different studios, doing miniature and trick photography work. His latest efforts were for the R-C corporation.

Thomas Wonder, six-year-old dancer, who will be remembered by Angelenos for his solo dancing with Gus Edwards and Annette Kellerman during their Los Angeles engagement, makes his debut into pictures in support of Baby Peggy in "The Little Match Girl."

Betty May, who is Century's latest addition to the ranks of fair-to-look-at ingenues, will be a featured member of Al Herman's cast in Lee Moran's next two-reel Century Comedy for which Al is now preparing.

Miss May has a prominent part in Herman's two previous pictures, "True Blue" and "Running Wild."

Al Herman, who has directed so many animal pictures for Century Comedies that he has learned to talk Fox Terrier, Baboon, Truck Horse and Nanny Goat, is back from a brief sojourn in the northern part of the state and is putting into shape his next two-reeler in which Lee Moran will be starred.

Tom Crizer, who has been chief cutter for Hal E. Roach for so many years that he has stopped counting 'em, is still the boss of that department, and any one that sees the Roach Comedies can well know why they are so well cut, for Tom has had a wide experience and has learned the director general Hal E. Roach's angle from the very beginning of his career, and has come right along with him to the very height of his career, which is admitted by the knowing ones as the present state of affairs down at the Culver City plant.

Les Bates is playing a heavy role with the Sequoia Motion Picture company in Sacramento. Eileen Sedgwick is the star. George Chesebro is the leading man. Breezy Eason is directing and his brother, Mike, is assistant director.

Zack Williams is once more working in an Al E. Christie comedy. His big, good-natured smile is always with him, which makes him one of the most popular of colored artists making the rounds of the studios.

A stage play, "Su Shon," in which Gloria Ray plays the title role, is now in the midst of rehearsals. Arthur Millett, well known motion picture actor, plays opposite Miss Ray. The stage manager, Ray Clifton has arranged for some wonderful paintings by Edward Flagg. He is being assisted by Harry La Verne. The production opens the 21st at the Cumnock Theater on Vermont Avenue for a week's run. There will be a change of bills weekly. The company is known as the Co-Operative Theater Association with Harl McInroy manager and director.

Joe Brandt, head of the Federated Corp., Inc., is in the city where he is the guest of Harry Cohn, who is producing the Hall Room Boys series.

Jane Black is working in the small town scenes of the Charles Ray production now in the making.

Fred Jefferson made three pictures for the New York Non-Theatrical company who deal in biblical stories which will be released by the Pictorial Club of the metropolis. Jefferson is working in a studio out at Burbank, having contracted for twenty-six more such subjects.

Dan L. Sharits had a very long engagement with C. M. Franklin through thirty-four weeks of filming for the Technicolor company of Boston. The completed story is to be shipped to Boston where it will be released.

Frankie Adams is right hand man to Harry Pollard who is directing the "Leather Pusher" series out at Universal. Frankie is lining up the fighters and working in the stories and watching some of the detail along these lines, while Frank Messenger is Pollard's assistant director.

Vera Lewis gained the consent of Mr. Schulberg of the Katherine McDonald company to release her from "The Lonely Road" in which she was to have appeared, so that she could accept the part of "Mrs. Chichester" in "Peg O' My Heart" with Laurette Taylor, under King Vidor's direction for the Metro Corp.

Big Boy Williams expects to get started again soon. William Hughes Curran directed his last three pictures, which have received very favorable reports from New York.

Vernon Dent, while waiting to start with Thos. H. Ince accepted a position with one of the Universal companies.

George Reed is working with Gasnier at the Louis B. Mayer studios.

Max Mogi is going to add his comedy company to the field of funmakers on the United lot with Bebe Ellen, and the dog, Buster, sharing honors in the two-reeler. Max has had wide experience in comedy and this is his first starring venture.

Bessie Bird is arranging a vaudeville sketch for Florence Murth, Fritz Fern and Jane Black, which will take them east where they will join a larger act. They are rehearsing their first vehicle which they hope to have in shape for a local showing prior to taking to the road.

Irving Cummings has moved his company over to the Hollywood studios where he has started a picture. Ralph Lewis, Milton Sills and Alice Lake are in the cast.

Ollie Sellers will be responsible for J. W. Kerrigan's comeback as a star in filmland. Mr. Kerrigan has said "No" to a lot of producers, and now that he has his own company, his efforts will be watched with interest. The company is working at the Hollywood studios.

Ida and Raida Schumaker are with Charles Ray, appearing in a husking bee sequence.

Jack Hoxie's latest story, "Riders of the Law," was given a preview at the Glendale theater, Monday evening. It was directed by Robert Bradbury. Jack Pearce was his assistant director.

The Screen Writers' Page - Conducted by William E. Wing

Hold 'Er Newt!

The Order of Amalgamated Screen Writers of the World should beware!

The old steed Ambition is rearin'.

Fond hope is a good thing. It should never wane. But every individual who is given to effervescing should keep a hand on the brakes.

For eagerness in the line of endeavor, nothing has ever equalled the fellow who believed he could write photoplays.

The studios themselves lent him the greatest encouragement by the lameness of productions. The amateur said in his heart, in his home, upon the street and everywhere else where an attentive ear could be found:

"If I couldn't write one better than that, I would make a hole in the ocean."

Thus far there are no visible holes in the big pond.

The flood began many years ago but, unlike Noah's little shower, it never has ceased.

The public, once enthused about a little thing like writing scenarios, never grows weary. The plain people dash 'em off, rush 'em out, fire them in shrapnel, or fling them from the balloon of fancy from the heights. They fairly rain down and, unfortunately, they all heap up in the studios.

Consequently the contributors to ye editorial shop are to blame, in great degree, for the present situation; an offensive feeling of the studio staff towards the flood of incoming manuscripts, the vast majority of which are not even half-baked.

It is not a fact that the many imaginative, but untrained persons of the earth, have "more plots than they can ever write." They are genuine in the belief. I have heard this declaration from a brainy fiction writer. He was only undeceived after a conscientious study of photoplay writing, of the studio and its needs for many months.

The men and women of photoplay wisdom will tell you that a writer should turn out but one or two scenarios a year, giving a majority of his time to the product.

That is a command to go to work.

It means hard work and plenty of it.

But whatever the product, at the end of the long period of effort, it will represent your best.

If such a story goes over, it will be a real credit to the writer.

But, the question now arises, will the studio remunerate the writer for his year of effort, by paying adequate prices for the two stories?

Are managements ready to meet this long gamble in time with a check to cover?

There are a few which still are willing to pay honest prices for really big photoplays in the original, but the majority of studios still are reserving the big roll for the printed fiction story, regardless of the fact that it really is not big.

There are signs that the independent, who is turning his attention to specials, will come to the relief of the situation. And these, in addition to the wiser program managements, perhaps will create a ready market for the once of twice-a-year story, despite its high price.

Just Titles

It is the frequent comment of editors that writers fail to give the time and attention to those lines which might be used for titles throughout the story, that they give to plot and situation.

In other words photoplaywrights are overlooking the opportunity of adding sales values to their scenarios.

Even though the movement of the synopsis may stagger a little at times, or the action sag, a meanful phrase, or a clever line easily will jerk the weary manuscript reader to attention again.

You see, the studio reader and editor knows the full values of a title which will sink in or brighten up the audience.

Many a set of titles have lifted a mediocre production, giving it a dignity and polish that were lacking previously.

Therefore it will pay well for the writer, when he has completed his scenario, to retrace his steps and, from the very beginning, reconstruct so far as effective lines are concerned.

It should be a special task.

It should require much time and thought.

But the result will prove itself in more sales and bigger prices.

Too Much Action

Undoubtedly every type of wholesome picture must be made to fit all classes of people. The rapid fire film has its worshippers in no small number. Even the so-called "high-class" houses love high drama and fight.

But there is a type of photoplay which dominates all audiences. It carries along high and low on the tide of its appeal.

Therefore the writer, who has acquired a very good knowledge of photoplay construction, and who has gained a grip on good plotting, should pause and consider that too much cry for action may have plunged him into an over-supply of physical movement.

Advancing the plot does not always mean that the shadow people move about, or that the locale changes frequently.

The evolution of the mind of an erring man, or the ages compressed into moments for the sufferer who is confronted, alone, with a situation which tries the soul of man, is screen movement, in its peculiar way.

And mental suggestion which reaches the audience, from the hush of a gripping moment upon the screen, carries more solid worth than the handsome hero bringing his lovely burden down the burning stairway.

Love, sorrow, poignant pain, the sweetness of brotherly love, are greater factors than physical thrills, breathless situations of danger, and the fireworks of the western battle royal.

Write fast action when you conjure up a good story of that class, but do not become obsessed by the physical.

Melodrama will always live, but the story that will linger longer in the minds of your audience is the unfoldment which reaches heart as well as brain.

That is the story which will make for your reputation.

Now You Know It

If you do not touch the human note, you have no story.

There is a story for every smile and every heart-ache in the world.

The writer who only works mechanically to "put it over," never makes a name for himself.

Praise virtue, but do not condone wrong, regardless of any screen "success" you have ever witnessed upon the silver sheet.

Do not have your characters cross the ocean more than a dozen times in one scenario. Very few managers can swim that far.

Now and then does your fancy bring forth something which sings so sweetly that listeners forget sorrow? Then you have accomplished much.

The Vikings were a striking people and picturesque. If period stuff is really coming back, then the red-blooded viking certainly should have his chance.

There is no more reason that grandmother should not be the lead in your scenario, than there is reason in always making your heroine young and beautiful.

With few exceptions, alleged comedy makers had to wait for the dramatic production to really reveal true sources of laughter, by introducing relief situations.

Stories based upon actual happenings do not fatten the sales of the average writer. There is something about cold facts which seem to hamper an ideal scenario development.

Applause at the conclusion of a photoplay does not always mean it is a success. A passe tenor gets the same kind of applause if he still has his wonderful top note for the conclusion of his selection.

If Mr. Hays can turn public sentiment against the narrow-minded censor, every photoplay writer extant will give him three rousing cheers, and their remaining small change with which to carry on the good work.

People

Mrs. Hank Knight is now engaged in the present Chas. Ray production, an adaption from one of James Whitcomb Riley's poems.

Lillian A. Lawrence is also one of the character women in the Chas. Ray production now filming.

Claire Du Berry, Coy Watson, Jr., James Conway, Louis Deumar and Walter Cooper have been cast for the Earle Williams production.

Euna Luckey keeps moving about the Vitagraph studios like a checker player makes a play, and just as conservatively, her position with the organization is a responsible one.

Eddie Dennis seems to be coming into the light. A financier has taken an interest in him and they are getting a five-reel script for him to be starred in. At present Eddie is doing a small town character for Harry Pollard out at Universal.

Jack Duffey is working with Joe Rock under the direction of Mort Peebles and John Smith. "Little Red Riding Hood" is the name of the story.

Chas. Clary, Melbourne McDowell, Helen Ferguson, Al McQuarrie and others are working under the direction of Ed Sedgewick at Universal. Ted Billings is prop man, while Harry Webb is the assistant director.

Helene Chadwick has returned from Fort Huachuca, Arizona, where she worked on "location" with the Morosco-Hawks company in "Border Patrol."

Claire DuBrey, George Field, Louis Dumar and Coy Watson are in the current Earle Williams cast.

Euna Luckey of Vitagraph has returned from an eastern trip which included sojourns in New York, Chicago, Detroit and Canada.

Plunk, plunk, plunkity, plunk, plunk. Listen to the typewriters sing. They're preparing the Writers' Issue for you. Ask CAMERA! about it.

Order your copy of the Writers' Issue now.

Gertrude Astor has been engaged to support Earle Williams in his new production, "You Never Know."

Ed Moriarty, who writes "Do You Remember" notes in the Examiner every morning and at the same time is the head of the publicity department at Vitagraph, took a holiday and motored down to Colorado with his mother over Labor Day.

H. F. Koenekamp is still shooting Larry Semon in his funny antics. Let it be known that Koene has a he-man's sized job which it takes a master to hold, for one must know speeds and angles that would make a Philadelphia lawyer go loco trying to figure out.

"Broken-Nose" Murphy and his loud clothes were on deck in the George Fitzmaurice production of "Kick In." He looks tough enough to make any one kick with all they possess if you happen to meet him on a dark night with a dark thing in his hand.

Dick Sutherland, whom the film world is laughing at when they witness Harold Lloyd's efforts of trying to capture Richard, the bad man of the community in "Grandma's Boy," is working in "Kick In."

Young Griffio, outside of being a regular leather pusher, makes a typical New York gangster of the Third Street Dock Gang on the screen.

Harry Lamont is around with a chip on his shoulder. The other day some mistook him for Wallace Beery, and now he feels that the resemblance mustn't only be in looks but in acting ability as well. Now he is acting as he never did before in the Jackie Coogan and Reginald Barker pictures.

Sylvia Ashton is back with Lasky working with Agnes Ayres under the direction of Paul Powell, the veteran director of the Lasky lot.

Contemporary Criticisms

"DUSK TO DAWN" (Pathe)

"Several subtitles in the introduction to 'Dusk to Dawn' prepare the observer to give free play to his imagination for what is to follow. The story is a rather unusual one, evolving about a girl who, in her dreams, each night is living another life in far-away India.

"There is an intriguing element to the production which gives it a strong interest and makes of it absorbing entertainment throughout. Florence Vidor does her usual excellent work and is supported by a strong aggregation of players.

"The scenes in India are elaborately staged with an array of picturesque natives and animals."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"The fine cast and the high artistic mounting given this production are the biggest points of appeal. . . . It takes a real artist to make the dual role of Marjorie Latham and Aziza, beggar girl of India, convincing. The fact that Florence Vidor is a real artist saves the situation. . . . Miss Vidor contributes to the screen an appealing and colorful portrayal.

"We think the picture would be vastly improved if the sub-theme in India had been eliminated—keeping a few flashes only. It would make the story much easier to follow and not detract in any way from the power of the plot.

"This picture has one of the finest mountings seen this year. . . . The shots of India are artistic gems, especially the views of the marriage procession. . . ."

—Motion Picture News.

"WHEN HUSBANDS DECEIVE" (Pathe)

"This picture is undoubtedly the best Leah Baird has appeared in up to date. The production is one that gives some pointed truths about wedlock. . .

"The cast has been well selected. Jack Mower is convincing as the leading man and William Conklin contributes a fine bit of 'heavy' characterization. Katherine Lewis repeats her former success in the role of a flapper. One of the big features of the picture is the introduction of 'Teddy,' the famous dog actor, and a monkey that gives the dog a close race for histrionic honors.

"The feature abounds in dramatic and melodramatic scenes."

—Motion Picture News.

"Here is a strong drama of domestic life and a worthy successor to Miss Baird's previous vehicles. It is very ably handled and hits upon hard facts, true to life in many respects.

"Leah Baird has chosen a subject which she is thoroughly capable of executing to best advantage. 'When Husbands Deceive,' which she wrote and scenarionized, is a strong dramatic feature. . . . The subject is handled with utmost skill and, with few exceptions, holds steadfast interest.

"Miss Baird wears her usual beautiful gowns and does excellent work."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"Miss Baird wrote the story, made the scenario, arranged the continuity and then played the leading role. And she has done everything expertly, also with an eye towards the showmanship angle. The story strikes a popular note and it has been pictorially expressed to good advantage.

"Wallace Worsley, the director, was about the only other person concerned with production except the cameraman and the film editor. He accomplished his part of the finished product with his customary skill. The cameraman and editor also deserve praise for their share of the entertainment value.

"The chief appeal of the picture will be found to lie in its intensely dramatic story, it being told in such a way that the drama is enhanced."

—Moving Picture World.

"DON'T SHOOT" (Universal)

"Smoothly constructed and acted, 'Don't Shoot' succeeds in perpetuating the interest without suffering any jogs or lapses. It is unusually finished in this respect. The story strikes a popular note and, as treated here by a capable director and cast should be an easily salable product.

"Herbert Rawlinson is more romantic than real but this consideration in many cases will only increase his success as the character he plays has only the glamour of wickedness without the sordid touches.

"There are several points of distinct appeal. There are some charming exteriors, a few striking carbarret shots, several moments of intense drama and a fight that is reckless enough to interest the most red-blooded."

—Moving Picture World.

"'Don't Shoot' is from the pen of George Bronson Howard. . . . This time it might appear as if Mr. Howard wrote hurriedly and without much attention to compact construction and hewing to the line. He takes entirely too much time in beginning his story. It is about the middle of the second reel when the crook in the case enters a certain house at midnight and is forced into a marriage with a girl he has never seen before in his life.

"It is, however, an interesting crook tale and Herbert Rawlinson manages to make James Harrington Court, attractive, despite his tendency to over-swagger. Edna Murphy is a charming heroine and the rest of the cast is adequate."

—Motion Picture News.

"The story moves along pleasantly without causing any great amount of excitement but at the same time furnishing sufficient entertainment value to keep it from being too draggy. The plot is somewhat similar to others wherein the crook reforms because of a girl but a few new twists have been added here and there to freshen it up.

The photography is generally good throughout the picture, although some of the exterior shots are a little too glary. Interior lightings satisfactory. Continuity agreeably handled and continuity good."

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"WEST OF CHICAGO" (Fox)

"'West of Chicago' does offer new thrills and it offers them in a way that the average picture audience seems bound to approve.

"It is a picturization of a good story well told and well acted by a small cast from start to finish. A westerner will readily recognize each of the types as he has seen them, and an easterner will recognize them as he has seen them in fiction.

"Charles Jones, the hero, gives an excellent portrayal of the role and is as picturesque as one could wish for.

His exploits are numerous and some of them hair raising.

"The story is well moulded and the continuity splendid. There is action every foot of the way."

—Motion Picture News.

"'West of Chicago' fills the bill as a western story, consisting of some worth while value. . . . There are a few thrills and some riding stunts and the development of the romance of the story is pleasing.

"Charles Jones gives a peppy performance and no doubt will delight his audience with suave mannerisms and dare devilry. Rene Adoree is pleasing in the role of Della More and gives good support. Philo McCullough is a thoroughly despicable villain and his work registers well.

"There are some attractive outdoor shots that have been nicely filmed. The interiors are adequate for the story and the lighting is good throughout."

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Swift action and plenty of intrigue make this an effective feature for Charles Jones. It is a stronger subject than some of his recent vehicles and promises greater drawing powers. Getting started with the thrills early in the picture proves to be a psychological advantage, for the star's ride with the senorita and his escape afterwards is picturesque and dashing and prepares one for active entertainment.

"The director and the actors have secured an effect of uninterrupted speed and enthusiasm.

"Rene Adoree is a charmingly different type and is suited to the sympathetic demands of her part."

Moving Picture World.

"There is no lack of pep in any ten feet of the film. The comedy is clean throughout. Rene Adoree is a thoroughly delightful heroine and Charles French one of the handsomest of villains."

—Morning Telegraph.

What Folks Think

WHAT FOLKS THINK

Editor "Camera!"—In a well known magazine, a year or more ago, I read a statement signed by the editor at Universal, in which he said that in the last five years his company had not purchased a single original script from persons outside the organization.

I suppose other companies buy about as many as Universal. If that is the truth, are you enough of a mathematician to estimate the amount of postage that would be required in order to sell a story to one of the producers.

Of course, judging by the pictures one sees, I would not be rash enough to intimate that they care much about real stories, but I write this after reading some articles on the "Scenario Market."

May I add that we think your screen criticisms most excellent and that they show far more taste and judgment—or is it perhaps less outside influence—than many which you quote from other publications. It is a pity more people cannot read them and so save themselves much money and disappointment through endeavoring to obtain mental relaxation by a haphazard visit to many well touted pictures which turn out to be nothing more than a lot of clap trap and rubbish intermingled with some fine outdoor scenes or a display of a human clothes horse.

Gratefully yours,

ONE WHO ENJOYS A GOOD SCREEN PLAY,

CHARLES M. FARRER.

WILL PRODUCE NO MORE

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 26.—Editor Camera!—Returning to town after several months in the mountains, I find that a number of players and others have asked my study when I plan to resume production.

Several months ago I disposed of my picture interests and retired from business; it is not my intention to engage in picture production again, either now or in the future.

My motion picture interests have been obtained by a new corporation, Federal Photoplays, Inc. Prominent in this corporation is W. G. Logan, a

Los Angeles business man of high standing, who is giving his time and attention to the company. Mr. Logan is creating an organization of experienced picture men, with the intention, I am advised, of beginning production some time this fall. Lincoln Hart, well known favorably in the industry, is Production Manager.

My hearty wishes for great success are with Mr. Logan, Mr. Hart and the other members of the organization, but I am not an officer of the company, nor a member of its board of directors, nor connected in any way with its management.

PIERCE KINGSLEY

Author, and Director of Unusual Motion Pictures, and Stage Material. Not Connected with an Agency, not connected with a School of Acting. Deal Only in Brains and Personality.

Yes quite a few have had their first Motion Picture Experience with me back east, The Lee Kids, Kelcy and Shannon, Noah Beery, Harry Millard, Harry Morey, Fritzie Brunette, Reta Jolivet, Edwin Law, and hundreds of others.

I wrote and produced After the Ball (Photoplay), Silver Threads Among the Gold. I picturized and produced Kaufman's House of Bondage, and as many as five hundred others from one to six reel subjects.

I wrote the following stage plays Deserted at the Altar, Kentucky Sue, From Ocean to Ocean, For the Honor of His Home, In Sunny Tennessee, Bells of Shannon, Step-brothers, etc.

Good stories make good directors, good parts make good actors. See me and talk it over. I have original material; I represent one of the oldest play brokers in New York—I know entertainment values, and box office values, I did not learn the Technique of the Drama or the Screen from books, but in the good old world of experience. As an actor, writer, and producer, Phil Goldstone, whom I sold the photo-play rights of "Deserted at the Altar" to, tells me that he is more than pleased with it and expects to have an unusual clean up with it.

I produce Educational and Industrial Subjects on contract, and will send my cameramen anywhere. Will supervise from story to screen, and guarantee results. Two top-notch cameramen with our own outfits now available. If you are an actor in pictures or on the stage? see me for new material. If you are going in pictures or on the stage? see me—I will start you right.

Our Travelogue

From Holland—Oscar Apfel, Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell, after filming "Bulldog Drummond" for Hollandia Film company.

From New York—George Hackathorne to play in "Merry-Go-Round." Erich von Stroheim directing.

From Vienna via New York—Pola Negri, to play in "Bella Donna," George Fitzmaurice, direction. Due September 23.

From New York—Forrest Robinson, character actor, and Mrs. Robinson.

From Europe—Peter Gardner has returned to Hollywood and pictures after an extended trip abroad.

To Holland—Wyndham Standing and Margaret Marsh to star in "The Lion's Mouse," from the book by C. and N. Williams, for Hollandia Film company.

To Mexico—Louise Lovely passed through Chicago on her way south, coincident with rumor from Winnipeg, that she would star in a picture in Canada.

Phil Goldstone is expected back here from New York by the 15th of this month.

Doris Baker has returned to Hollywood to re-enter the picture game after an absence of a year, during which she has been playing in vaudeville in the East.

J. C. Van Trees is going to Honolulu to make a picture. His last work here was as cinematographer for Phil Rosen who directed Rodolph Valentino in "The Young Rajah."

John Stumars and Al Willey have left for San Francisco where they are to work with a northern company. John is the cameraman, while Al shoots second camera.

Theodore Roberts has gone to Frisco to open up with his sketch during his vacation from Paramount pictures. He ought to be back about the time Cecil B. De Mille starts the ball rolling on his next picture.

Bill Craft and the Russell company went to Portland with George Larkin and a company of players, including Harry Moody who is assisting him and Doc Cook as cameraman. They will make three pictures in the Oregon territory and return south.

Tom Forman has taken his entire cast of players to Del Monte, where a fishing village has been constructed on the rugged shores of the bay for the big scenes of "Ching, Ching, Chinaman." The principals include Lon Chaney, Marguerite de la Motte, Harrison Ford, Walter Long, John Sainpolis, little Buddy Messenger, Frances Raymond and William Dudley.

The entire Shipman company has now returned from Canada to Los Angeles. There were twenty-five men and women in the cast. Nell Shipman is engaged in cutting the picture, "The Grub Stake," at the Downing laboratories with the assistance of Joe Walker who is finishing the double exposures.

COMING FROM TAHITI

R. A. Walsh and company of players returned to Los Angeles Tuesday after having spent two months in the South Sea Islands filming Carey Wilson's story, "Captain Blackbird."

CARPENTIER SINGER AND POET

It is not generally known that among his accomplishments Georges Carpentier, who plays the leading role in the J. Stuart Blackton film, "A Gipsy Cavalier," is a singer of ability, and also a poet. The noted Frenchman has a rich baritone voice of melodious and sympathetic quality, and a wide repertory which he has learned. He knows many of the beautiful French folk songs and has completely learned 17 operatic roles. Carpentier is now collaborating with a French dramatist in the writing of a play which will appear in Paris in the autumn. Among others he has written are the lyrics to a song entitled "Vagabond Philosophy" with music by Florian Brock.

Sloane House, where the garden fete scenes in the J. Stuart Blackton film, "A Gipsy Cavalier," with Georges Carpentier were staged, is the London residence of Mr. Blackton. This fine old-world structure was built over 200 years ago by Sir Hans Sloane, founder of the British Museum, and contains many fine specimens of art and antique furniture. Sloane House is situated in the heart of Chelsea, and is surrounded by the studios of many artistic people.

C. W. Smiley played a cop for Earle Williams and acted like he knew what a real minion of the law did under such circumstances.

Mr. Rex McDougall, an English actor, who has made some fame in America, has a leading role with Georges Carpentier in the J. Stuart Blackton film, "A Gipsy Cavalier."

Horace Williams, casting director of the Thomas H. Ince studios, has a placard tacked up in his offices which reads, "The Price of 'Hams' have come down." He clipped this out of an ad in one of the leading morning newspapers and is a fitting one for the present way of things in film-dom, slangily speaking.

Dorothy Phillips is resting, preparatory to starting work on Allen Holubar's next melodrama for First National, in which she will be starred. Mr. Holubar and Harvey Gates, author of "Hurricane's Gal" and other Holubar successes, are now putting the story into continuity.

Arthur Edmund Carew has moved his make-up box from the Coogan sets to his home where he will remain for a while until starting on his next production.

BLACKTON STUDIOS, LONDON

Mr. J. Stuart Blackton has completed an arrangement with the International Artists film company, Ltd., whereby that company, of which Mr. Alan S. Butler is president, will present "A Gipsy Cavalier," the film production presenting Georges Carpentier, and a notable cast of artistes.

The Gaumont Film company will release this film throughout the United Kingdom. The Trade Show date has been set for August 31.

Miss Flora Le Breton, who plays the heroine with Georges Carpentier in the J. Stuart Blackton film, "A Gipsy Cavalier" has been called by Mr. Blackton the "Dresden China Doll" of the English screen. This title has been given this charming artiste by Mr. Blackton because of her daintiness and doll-like appearance, especially in the 18th century costumes.

Henry Herbert is doing a Don in the William Duncan story now being made. Edith Johnson has the role of a senorita, the daughter of the Don. The production is being directed by William Duncan, who is the star.

An Appreciation

AFTER many months of wandering, the first film-born of Omar and his Rubaiyat has returned to the City of the Angels, and home, with never a christening in the presence of its god father, The Public.

It has been adventuring in far-off cutting rooms, possibly to prove that all the "assassins" were not confined to the tribe of Hassan.

But Ferdinand Pinney Earle, creator of the production, lured his offspring back again and, although an arm was where a leg formerly functioned, an ear missing, and raiment mussed a bit, an audience of discrimination sat in a Hollywood theater, at a private showing, during which two solid hours vanished as but a minute, so fascinating did the production prove.

Mr. Earle, like Rex Ingram, came from the world of brush and canvass, to spread his art upon the greater screen. He created a new Rubaiyat with such spiritual colors, that they swayed.

But his genius went further. When a mixed audience, composed of financiers, society folk, writers, artists and studio emineents burst into wildest applause time after time, at the appearance of "mere sets," one may well bow to a new genius of filmland.

And all this despite the fact that the East has sent back a print of Rubaiyat which would discredit the intelligence of a school boy.

It has been my fortune to see some of the most wonderful sets that this Old Earth possesses, but I may truly say that none seized me more suddenly, or broke with greater, sudden inspiration upon the view and the brain, than some of Ferdinand Earle's backgrounds, in his Rubaiyat.

His vision and inspired art seem to promise something bigger and better for the future screen.

The screen people, the groupings and atmosphere of Mr. Earle's Rubaiyat merge, in pastel, to sing the limpid refrain of that poem of romance and tragedy, with the grand Frederick Warde in the van.

This is not a review of Mr. Earle's creation. That must come later, when that kindly physician performs many minor and not a few major operations upon the patient which—despite his adventures in a tough old world, continues "singing in the wilderness."

Story By

Eve Unsell, newly appointed head of the story producing department at the Schulberg studios, has written the screen version of "Are You A Failure?" It is probable that one sequence of the plot will require the sending of an expedition to the North Woods for a series of exterior scenes that could not be faithfully reproduced about Hollywood.

Henry McCarty is preparing the continuity for a new five-reel western drama starring Lester Cuneo. Work on the picture will start within the next few days under the direction of Mr. McCarty. Francelia Billington (Mrs. Cuneo) has the leading feminine role.

Richard Thomas is preparing a five-reel society drama, that carries a spell of mystery that holds every one in doubt, until the finale of the narrative, as to who is responsible for something that happened during the reeling off of the subject.

With John Grey, Mell Brown and Rex Taylor officiating in the Mack Sennett scenario department, the picture public may look forward to shortly seeing some new and novel comedy entertainment. This trio of writers, known for their ability to originate funny situations, have been very busy preparing scripts for the 1922-1923 Mack Sennett producing campaign, which starts about September 15.

THE CAMERA BOYS

Al Gilks, A. S. C., is filming "His American Wife," starring Gloria Swanson.

King Gray, A. S. C., will film Hallroom Boys comedies

Steve Norton, A. S. C., will photograph two-reel historical productions for Choice Productions at Universal City.

Rene Guissart, A. S. C., will continue indefinitely as chief cinematographer for Harley Knoles Productions in London, according to word received from England yesterday.

Edward Kull, A. S. C., will direct Jack Mulhall in Universal's series of productions of Jack London's "Tales of the Fish Patrol."

Belasco Productions, Inc., of San Francisco is in Los Angeles to produce "Her Price," under direction of Dallas Fitzgerald. They have no connection with the Belasco studio, F. H. MacQuarrie, director, of San Francisco.

Scott R. Beal is assistant director to Hampton Del Ruth in the "Marriage Chance" at the Long Beach studios.

Parker McConvill has been engaged by Warner Brothers for the part of Maury Noble in "The Beautiful and the Damned."

Joe Waiker, head cameraman for Nell Shipman and his wife, Marjorie Warfield, have returned from Canada where they have been filming "The Grub Stake." Miss Warfield and Joe Walker were married just before starting north, and made use of the expedition as their honeymoon.

Edward Montagne, June Mathis, Jeanie Macpherson, Frank Woods—there are many writers, but only one WRITERS' ISSUE. It's coming. Wait for it. Ask CAMERA!

Cutting Up

(Vitagraph)

Byron Robinson is handling the cutting of "When Danger Smiles" which has as its stars William Duncan and Edith Johnson (Mrs. Duncan). The story is filmed by George Robinson, while Don Clark is the assistant director.

A. A. Jordan, besides being head of the cutting staff, handles the Earle Williams feature, "You'll Never Know." Williams is the star, supported by Gertrude Astor, directed by Bert Ensinger and Dave Smith, with Vincent McDermott and Fred Tyler assistant directors. It was photographed by Steve and Ernie Smith.

W. S. Smith, general manager of the Vitagraph studios, his son, Frank Smith, assistant manager, and Duane Wager, casting director, keep their best eye on the daily work of the companies, and with the co-operation of A. A. Jordan and Sam Lipkin, the cutting department of that studio have turned out pictures that the New York offices from A. E. Smith on down, have placed their approval on.

Chuck Reisner's initial efforts with his son, "Dinkey," as a star, will soon know the verdict of his efforts, for the picture is in the final stages of its cutting, according to Earl Neville who is doing the trimming.

Watch! Wait! Read the Writers' Issue.

Having completed the cutting of "The Voice from the Minaret," Frank Lloyd is preparing the scenario for Norma Talmadge's next production, "Within the Law."

CHANGE IN TITLE

Thos. H. Ince, besides being busily engaged in the cutting of his fall and winter releases through First National, is also seeking titles for those productions. To date "Jim" has been changed to "What a Wife Learned"; "The Brotherhood of Hate," to "Scars of Jealousy," and "Someone to Love" to "Ten Ton Love."

Alfred Hollingsworth has just finished a Christie comedy, "Choose Your Weapons," in which he staged a series of broadsword fights with Bobby Vernon. This is the second picture in which Hollingsworth has acted as maitre d' arms, for he also arranged the fights in "A Barnyard Romeo," where Bobby dreamed of the days of D'Artagnan and fought at least a dozen men at one time.

Allan Hale, who went from a long engagement with Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," immediately to Shirley Mason's new production now being made at the William Fox studios, has rounded out a whole year without having one day between pictures.

Archie Stout has joined the Jimmie Clemmens company as cameraman at the Court Street plant. Jack C. O'Brien is directing a series of two-reel comedies with kiddies and grown-ups.

Madame Rosanova will remain in Los Angeles until the western showing of "Hungry Hearts," in which she comes to the front as a new screen mother.

Cullen Landis is back from location with the Harry Carey company and anxious to start work on his first starring picture.

DENOUNCES REPUTATION WRECKERS

In an editorial titled "Hysterics or Cussedness?" the Los Angeles Times has this to say about the charges brought by a 16-year-old girl against Eugene O'Brien, film actor:

"Although The Times has no inside information as to the truth or falsity of her story, an examination of the stated facts would seem to indicate that the girl made up this yarn about Mr. O'Brien out of whole cloth—a yarn adorned by gifts of automobiles that she can't describe; by alleged mock marriages the details of which she cannot remember.

"Another girl of about the same age has brought to the public notice somewhat similar charges against another movie actor, Herbert Rawlinson.

"Although occasionally it is announced that the girls in question have decided to 'drop' the charges, the questions at issue still remain undecided.

"It would seem that the public has some rights in these matters. If the charges made by these girls prove to be true, both the actors in question should be driven out of the films. If the charges are not true, these girls should be imprisoned and punished.

"There is altogether too much of a tendency to allow these sensational-hunting flappers to bring disgrace and shame upon some celebrity and scandal upon the public; then dismiss the whole affair with an indulgent smile as the vagaries of a hysterical girl.

"Any girl 16 years old, with brains enough to concoct an elaborate story such as these girls concocted is old enough to be held responsible.

"If it is proven that these girls have lied such an example should be made of them that the next girl seeking notoriety will find another avenue for her avid egotism without destroying the reputations of men in the public eye or destroying the faith of the public."

Crane Wilbur has written a play that for grisly horror is said to exceed anything on Broadway. It is called "The Monster."

Larry Semon's pictures have caught the eye of Sid Grauman, who has signed to take three subjects. The first will be "Golf," recently completed and shipped to New York. Semon week will be celebrated September 3 to 11 in California.

In the Ring With Toreador

Returning to the studio, members of the "Captain Blackbird" company tell of being caught in a gale off Tahiti. The Goldwyn press department promises to let us know next week whether they were saved, or not.

Mary had a little smile
That used to knock 'em dead;
She took it to a casting man
And stood him on his head.

Speculators are hastening to purchase junk of several years ago, to foist upon the market. Now if the exhibitor could discover which is the ancient firver, and which the present-day production, he might do something about it, couldn't he?

Prohibition agents pretend to be film folks on location making "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in order to trap five Polish moonshiners near a New York town.

Guess that'll hold the reformer who charged that motion pictures were interfering with dry law enforcement.

"Oh, ma, may I go in to swim?
No, no, my precious pearl;
That sure would spoil your chance to be
A movie bathing girl."

AS WE GO TO PRESS A RUMOR FLOATS UP CAMERA! ALLEY THAT BILL HART, JR. PLANS HIS OWN COMPANY TO PRODUCE "WHAT IS HOME WITHOUT A POPPA!" IN FIVE SCREAMS.

"I am hopeful of the day when motion pictures will go out of control of the devil."—William Jennings Bryan in Bible school talk.

Thanks, Bill. We'll try to feel optimistic about politics, too.

"Manslaughter"

This stunt cannot fail to attract attention. Buy a dozen sheets—ordinary Irish linen will do—and paint on them: "If you approve of 'MANSLAUGHTER' see picture at Blank's theater."

Now hire a dozen assorted ballyhoosers and coach them. Send them out one at a time. The Director-General of Exploitation should follow with a sheet. The ballyhooser approaches a pedestrian and inquires courteously: "Good day, sir! Is it hot enough for you?"

When pedestrian goes on, the D.G. of E. throws the sheet over the ballyhooser's body and goes back to the theater for another.

The P. A.'s Friends

James Starr is editing a daily syndicated newspaper column called "Movieganda" from 6401 South Park avenue.

Alma Whittaker, 1040 Kensington road, is writing a weekly film news letter for British consumption.

The Greenville (S. C.) News has added a four-page Sunday rotogravure section.

The Worcester (Mass.) Sunday Times starts publication tomorrow (September 10.)

Among newspapers of the United States the first half of 1922, four Los Angeles dailies held the following positions in volume of advertising: Times, first Sunday, third morning; Examiner, fifth Sunday, seventh morning; Herald, fourth and Express ninth, evening.

Editor & Publisher lists net paid circulation as follows: Herald, 150,463; Examiner, 127,033 (Sunday, 261,229); Times, 110,190 (Sunday, 163,396); Express, 83,008. Figures on The Record were not given.

The El Paso (Tex.) Post started publication August 21. It's a Scripps-McRae afternoon paper.

The Morristown (Tenn.) Evening Mail has been merged with the weekly Gazette, and becomes the Daily Gazette.

ABOUT FILM PUBLICITY

"We tried to eliminate it once, and while we get a kick from the picture houses, we got a bigger kick from our readers," says Frank D. Throop, publisher of the Davenport (Ia.) Democrat and Leader. "I find that people are very much interested in how pictures are made, what is being made, and various incidents concerning the making of pictures."

Throop relates that when he returned home after the Rotary Club convention in Los Angeles, he found everyone more interested in Hollywood than in any other feature of the entire trip.

William S. Hart, Jr., weight 9 pounds, arrived at Santa Monica, Wednesday morning. Winifred Westover-Hart is doing well and so is the new juvenile.

Joseph A. Jackson and Peter Gridley Smith were Monday appointed Wampas correspondents to Camera! by Arch Reeve, president.

Jean Hersholt has completed his engagement with Marshall Neilan in "The Stranger's Banquet." He will not return to directing by taking charge of the megaphone at J. Warren Kerrigan's studio as reported. Mr. Hersholt intends to continue playing the parts of bad men in front of the camera.

Needed: Think-or-Quit Orders

“OUR people as a whole are suffering from moving pictures and newspapers that save them the trouble of thinking.”

William Peter Hamilton is quoted as saying that. Hamilton is editor of the Wall Street Journal. Although Wall street is popularly supposed to run the motion picture business, Hamilton is not talking as an expert on motion pictures. He is talking as an observer of motion pictures—and of life.

Motion pictures can make people think and still be entertaining. Outside of “Nanook of the North,” Camera! can’t point out any examples, however. Anyone who has other examples is hereby invited to present them for proper credit.

Why should so many trashy fiction stories be elaborately picturized and solemnly “presented”?

The old, thumb-marked excuse of giving the public what it wants is no answer to that question.

If the public now reached by pictures “wants” trash, why not go after a new public? The present picture public is not more than 20,000,000—there are 85,000,000 more persons in our states alone who should be given some interest in motion pictures.

What bright young producer will break the ice?

What we need in this industry is a think-or-quit order.

Lots of onlookers wondered where the camera was concealed when William Russell rescued a woman from drowning at Venice.

Some day some persons will realize that screen thrills are not all faked, and that screen heroes can be real-life heroes, too.

Ideals from Hollywood

“TOO many of our people are getting their ideals from Hollywood and not from heaven,” said Dr. Clarence True Wilson, urging censorship of pictures at the Oregon conference of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Maybe Dr. Wilson hasn’t heard of “The Pilgrimage Play.” Maybe he doesn’t know half of Hollywood spends three evenings a week on a hillside listening to music.

Probably he visualizes Hollywood boulevard as one long Cecil DeMille set with buxom bathing beauties lolling on every corner.

Probably, too, he had just read the joke in Judge about the applicant before the pearly gates. St. Peter asked where he was from. “Hollywood.” “Well, go on in,” said the saint, “but I’m afraid you won’t like it!”

Muriel McCormick spurned a $1,000,000 film offer (thought those days were gone forever!) to study music in an attic. The attic is across the street from Mother’s home. Mother is John D. Rockefeller’s daughter.

Muriel has self-denial!

The Camel in the Tent

THE censors are getting bolder.

We’ve been trying to tell the world that, with motion picture censorship as a precedent, further inroads on the American right of free speech would be made.

A new attempt is reported from the east. A group of purists has written book publishers suggesting that a committee be appointed to pass on the morals of manuscripts before they are printed.

Motion picture censorship let the camel’s head through the tent flap.

Book censorship will be the camel’s forelegs.

Magazine censorship and newspaper censorship—logically following books—will be the camel’s back.

Radio broadcasting censorship comes next—the camel’s hindquarters.

A final swish of the camel’s tail and we must move out of our little tent of freedom—sans right to see, read, hear or talk of anything not censored—all to make room for the ugly beast of censorship.

Film Capital Production Notes

"THE FAMOUS MRS. FAIR"

"The Famous Mrs. Fair," the James Forbes play, has been chosen by Fred Niblo as the first of his series of all-star special which Louis B. Mayer will present through Metro. Work on the scenario has already been started.

"Captain Applejack," originally scheduled for production, is enjoying such a remarkable run in New York that Mayer consented to hold up the making of the film.

Irving Cummings will start production this week on the first of a series of Irving Cummings productions to be released and distributed by Principal Pictures corporation. This story was written by Harvey Gates. The cast includes Milton Sills, Alice Lake, Ralph Lewis and Richard Headrick. It is being filmed at Hollywood studio.

Nat Deverich, president of the Fine Arts studios, is named as director of the first story to be produced by the Fine Arts studios. The stories will be of the dramatic type and each will be presented with an all-star cast. Deverich will direct, and work on the initial picture is expected to commence this week.

Charles R. Seeling productions has taken space at the Fine Arts studios where work is scheduled to commence at once on "The Purple Dawn," a melodrama from the pen of Mr. Seeling. First scenes for the picture will be taken on Ria Vista island in the Sacramento river. Bessie Love, Priscilla Bonner and others are named in the all-star cast. Park Frame is assistant director and Vernon Walker is behind the camera.

Gil Pratt will direct the new series of pictures to be made under the banner of Amalgamated Productions, of which G. M. "Broncho Billy" Anderson is the head. The company has taken production quarters at Fine Arts where first scenes for the company's newest story will be shot this week. Stan Laurel is star of the series.

B. P. Schulberg has announced the purchase of screen rights to "The Hero," from Sam H. Harris, who staged it so successfully with Richard Bennett in the leading role.

The story already is in the hands of Miss Eve Unsell, editor-in-chief at the Schulberg picture plant, who probably will revise it for the screen herself.

"The Hero" presents to the screen a characterization so entirely new that it can be compared to nothing heretofore seen on stage or screen, unless it be "Lilliom." The play, which is from the pen of Gilbert Emery, best known as a short-story writer, was declared to be "one of the most promising first plays ever to come from the pen of an American author."

Chuck Reisner has started on the first of a series of two-reel comedies at the Hall Room Boys studios, featuring his son "Dinkey." The subjects will be known as Dudley-Dean comedies. After completing that contract Chuck is to make a five-reel feature with Harry Cohn at the helm.

Robert Eddy, director of Plum Center Comedies for F. B. O. release, is assembling his cast for the eighth of the series of twelve comedies to be produced by the Paul Gerson Pictures of San Francisco. Dan Mason is the star of the comedies, and Wilna Hervey the leading woman. A. H. Gribler, scenario chief, is whipping a story into shape.

Bessie Love in "The Purple Dawn"

Harry Rapf, who will produce Charles G. Norris' famous novel, "Brass" for Warner Bros. expects to leave sometime this week for Saratoga, Cal., to confer with Norris.

A. Warner one of the officials of the Warner Bros. organization in the east arrived in Los Angeles Monday to confer with J. L. and S. L. Warner concerning next year's production schedule and also the enlargement of the Warner Bros. studio on the coast. The Warner Bros. plan to produce eighteen popular novels for which the film rights have already been bought and announcement of which will be made in the near future. Each production will be done by an all-star cast.

William Desmond has started another serial. Laura La Plante is his leading lady, with Reeves Eason directing and Mack Wright carrying the script.

THE DAYS OF '48

"The Covered Wagon," Emerson Hough's successful novel will be made as a James Cruze production for Paramount pictures. It will be an epic drama, embracing the westward journey of the prairie schooners which started from Westport Landing, now Kansas City. Three hundred and fifty of these great land ships will be shown. Among other things a buffalo hunt is to be filmed. Jack Cunningham adapted the book and a cast of featured players will be chosen.

"JAVA HEAD" TO BE SCREENED

Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, "Java Head," is to be made as a Paramount Picture. It will be a George Melford production and exteriors will be filmed in Salem, Mass., and vicinity, while the Long Island studio will be used for interiors. The author will collaborate on the scenario and Waldemar Young has already gone East to perfect these arrangements. Mr. Melford will follow in a few days with his staff. Leatrice Joy, Jacqueline Logan and Raymond Hatton will be among the featured players in this story of the sea-faring days.

William deMille is back from a few days rest and is getting ready to start work on his next Paramount production in which Bebe Daniels and Lewis Stone are cast for the leading roles. Kathlyn Williams will also have an important part. Clara Beranger wrote and adapted the story, which affords Miss Daniels a very powerful characterization.

Another new company has taken production quarters at the Fine Arts studios. Charles R. Seeling Productions moved into the plant this week where work will commence at once on "The Purple Dawn," a dramatic story from the pen of Mr. Seeling. Bessie Love, William E. Aldrich, Eddie Peil, Pat Harmon and others are in the all-star cast.

"Chicago Sal" is one of the first of a series of three super features which Irving Cummings is producing for the Principal Pictures Corp. at the Hollywood Studios, Inc.

An all star cast has been engaged for "Chicago Sal" including Milton Sills, Alice Lake, Ralph Lewis, Claire McDowell, Richard Headrick and others.

Announcement has been made by the management of the Fine Arts studios that present indications are that the plant will be filled to production capacity within a short time. Three new units were added to the studios this week, making a total of eight companies now engaged in production there.

To make George Ade's second original story, written expressly for him, Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, left this week for New York. The picture "Back Home and Broke," is to be made at the Long Island studio. Alfred Green, the director, will follow with his staff shortly and with Mr. Meighan will meet George Ade at the latter's home in Indiana, for a final consultation. Lila Lee goes east to play the feminine lead and Laurance Wheaton will also be cast for an important part.

Mary Miles Minter's new Paramount picture, directed by Charles Maigne and adapted by Will M. Ritchey from Stephen French Whitman's novel, "Sacrifice," will shortly take the company into jungle scenes, representing the heart of the African forest. Semi-tropic locations made purely tropical by the hands of the studio experts have been discovered not far from Hollywood.

Current Reviews

"Trooper O'Neill"

ARTISTS would be amused were a thriller in Detective Stories illustrated by exquisite etchings—and readers of the thriller probably wouldn't appreciate the art. Perhaps a steady diet of it would gradually gain their appreciation, however.

There is an analogous situation in "Trooper O'Neill," which is just another northwest mounted police story, graced by occasional screen paintings of beauty by Lucien Andriot, an artist of the lens. Not many art lovers will see the picture, but the folks who do see it will unconsciously absorb some appreciation of artistic composition.

There is one moment of unstilted drama in this story by George Goodchild, and William K. Howard's script handle it in just the right way. A woman has died. Three men with eyes tear-dimmed throw dice for the privilege of avengement. The dice are not shown, but the actors' faces are. Then the action jumps to another sequence. Good suspense here later serves to keep spectators guessing.

That is merely introduction. The real story is a trite affair that any bright little scenario student can reconstruct in a moment, when he learns that Trooper O'Neill is assigned to "get his man," and that the dead woman has a charming sister.

Scott Dunlap directed. He steps the action forward as fast as the script permits.

Francis McDonald has the "fat" characterization. His scowls are monotonously the same, but his dramatic demeanor is convincing.

Charles Jones ("Buck") Jones, if you don't recognize the name—is Trooper O'Neill. The most that can be said for Trooper O'Neill is that he is clean-cut, rides a horse well, and salutes smartly. But Charles' uniform is so stiffly starched, the poor boy can do little else.

Jack Rollens enacts a plump but tough recruit in a human way, and gets all the chuckles lying about loose.

The cutter left in too much of Beatrice Burnham's lip-trembling in her early scenes, which prejudices spectators. Also too much of some over-saintly poses.

Karl Forms as the old father, Sidney Jordan as the impetuous brother, are acceptable.

Claude Peyton does some wild scrapping with Jones in the early portions, and steps in later in time to be conveniently killed.

"Men Of Zanzibar"

THERE is great mystery in the first reel of "Men of Zanzibar." The mystery being, where is the cast and what does a reel of stock film and letter insertions mean? In the second reel of Richard Harding Davis' submerged story, one of Fox's male "idols" is seen, William Russell. Edward LeSaint captured the original story and brought it into captivity by filling it with civilized hokum and dashing into it "daring" titles of insipid variety. Rowland V. Lee gets the credit of bringing to the screen one of the marvels of the age. We see women who, the titles tell us, have been on the island for years, in the latest Parisian gowns, dancing the newest roof garden steps, and natives of Zanzibar regaled in the garb of Sheikland. This is the height of economy on the part of the fast-producing Fox organization. We hope that the thought will not occur to them to produce a picture of Chinese locale, for they have not yet used up the sets and costumes of "Monte Cristo."

William Russell overestimated his importance to the screen. Brilliantine and eyelash cosmetics play a big part of his career. Perhaps this egoism had something to do with the fact that one of the better male actors of the cast was not credited on screen or program. That person is Claude Peyton who played a heavy with skill.

Ruth Renick has the advantage of being the only woman in the picture. There is no snap to her acting but she is pretty and plays the part with serenity.

Harvey Clark does good work in the toupeed character and once in a while lands a big laugh.

Arthur Morrison plays an indifferent role with sincerity. The interior camera work is only ordinary and sometimes groggy, but occasionally, as if through sheer luck David Able shoots a nifty forest.

"Strange Idols"

AN aspiring writer by the name of Jules Furthman has made a novel discovery in the line of film plays. He has written a story that he terms "original," dealing with a heretofore unheard of thing the "triangle" situation. This unique story contains the hero, —ine, and villain. Such originality should not pass by unsung. Bernard Durning had the honor to direct the masterscript and it is difficult to know whether it was wrecked in the making or was born deformed. It was rather annoying to see the leading lady, a blonde, become a decided brunette when doubled in long shots, dancing.

From the first opening shot, a huge interior, the photography was beautiful and distracted one's mind from the horrors and triteness of the plot. Don Short was back of the camera.

Dustin Farnum retains his magnetic personality in spite of his mileage over the years. Never does he forget to smile face front to the camera nor hesitate turning the heroines back to us when proving himself a cinema "great lover."

Doris Pawn has personality, lots of it. But she has little chance to use it and it falls in the shadow of the star.

Philo McCullough as a dancer is a good actor. He has an indifferent part that he struggles with nobly.

Richard Tucker as a cafe owner has virtue that is unbelievable, but he works well and fast for his time is brief on the screen.

This concludes the epidemic of Fox films this week.

"Broadcasting"

A FOURTH McDonald-Johnny Jones comedy-melodrama has reached the screen with a slight deviation from their usual kid comedy picture. This production, "Broadcasting," is a timely subject with a bit of drama and suspense in the plot. The fact that children have taken up the radio craze makes the theme logical and comedy situations run rampant throughout the two reels.

Mrs. L. K. Deighton wrote the story and Mason Litson wrote the continuity. Not only did Litson adapt it to the screen, but he directed the subject and handled the kiddies in the skillful manner and with as good results as former ones.

This picture cannot be compared to its forerunners because of the difference in type, and while it is entertaining it takes a half reel to get to the story.

Roy June, the cameraman, got some fine exterior shots and lightings, while the interiors were just straight photography.

Johnny Jones is the same poised boy actor. He is ever at ease before the lens and adapts himself to his part whatever it may be.

But of the children Gertrude Messinger is the prize emotional actress. Her naturalism and naivete are charming to see.

On Kenneth Green, the fat boy comedian, rests the greater part of slapstick comedy.

Other clever kids, members of the "gang" are present in all their talented glory.

A preview of Bertram Bracken's all-star production, "Over Here," was given September 7. Prominent in the cast are Jean Perry, Edward Kimball, Tully Marshall, Wilfred Lucas, Snitz Edwards, Kenneth Gibson, Eddie Traebol and Ben Dely. The feminine roles were assumed by Estelle Taylor, Winifred Landis, Milla Davenport, Margaret McWade and Kate Price.

Where to Find People You Know

Theodore Kosloff, Bert Lytell and Betty Compson head the cast for the George Fitzmaurice production, "To Have and To Hold."

Ralph Cloninger is playing a leading role in the Reginald Barker production, "Timber."

Adolphe Menjou has completed the role of Stem in "Clarence" and is vacationing before the new William De Mille production is started. In "Notoriety" he will be co-featured with Lewis Stone, Bebe Daniels, and Kathlyn Williams.

Ernest Torrence, who played the part of the heavy in "Tol'able David" has completed "Singed Wings" at the Lasky studio. In this he will be seen as the half crazy clown, Emilio.

Cullen Landis will soon begin work on his first starring vehicle for Robertson Cole under the personal supervision of Sherwood McDonald.

Eva Novak has completed two pictures with Jack Holt and Tommy Meighan at the Lasky studio. Her next will be "Rock of Ages" with her sister, Jane.

Sylvia "Mother" Ashton, prominent character actress in Paramount pictures, has been loaned to Christie comedies for a houseboat comedy in which Neal Burns is featured. Burns, Director Sidney, Charlotte Merriam, Sylvia Ashton, Don Bailey and others of the cast are now at Balboa Beach.

"Bebe" Blackburn, three and a half years, has been engaged for a new Christie comedy houseboat story. The new movie youngster dives and swims under water just like a little mackerel.

Shannon Day will play the featured feminine role with Johnny Walker in "Captain Fly-by-night," a R-C production. William Howard will direct. Production will begin shortly.

In order to keep a promise made several years ago, Hobart Bosworth, who has just completed "The Beloved Unknown," has journeyed south to Los Angeles and has temporarily laid aside his stellar robes to play an important part in a production now being made by Marshall Neilan.

Fred Cavens, former co-director for Max Linder, is now in San Francisco at the Loew Theater, playing the prologue for the prisoner of Zenda. At the expiration of a two weeks engagement he will open for two weeks at the Loew's State in Los Angeles.

Emile Chautard is engaged by the Universal to direct a magazine story by Mary Lerner. It is called "Forsaking All Others."

Alyse Hunt Whitaker, newspaper and scenario writer, formerly of Goldwyn, was guest of honor at a luncheon on Thursday, at the Writers' Club, given by Mrs. Adeline Alvord, critic and author's representative.

Ray Rennahan, cameraman of the Technicolor company, is considering a proposition to go to Boston for that company. They are making productions entirely in natural colors.

Tenny Wright is back from Europe where he has been for many weeks helping Eddie Laemmle start "Ivanhoe." His debut, however, has been postponed and Eddie Laemmle should be setting foot on New York soil soon. He may return to the coast to start shooting another feature with one of the Universal stars.

Lydia Yeamans Titus, character actress, has arranged with Edward M. Kimball for one of his one-act playlets entitled, "Weighed in the Balance," as she is considering returning to vaudeville. Kimball wrote and produced the sketch in the east five years ago.

George Kuwa, who plays in "The Beautiful and Damned," has not only been on the stage but has taken a crack at the commercial life. Before he left Japan he was a bank clerk and after he came to California he was a very successful tobacco salesman.

Harry Rapf, producing for Warner Bros. is planning a series of entertainments for Vera Gordon who comes to the Orpheum in a few weeks. Miss Gordon made several motion pictures under Mr. Rapf's supervision and her vaudeville act was staged under his direction.

Cleo Ridgeley has been cast to play the part of the show girl in Warner Bros. production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's, "The Beautiful and Damned," which William A. Seiter is directing.

Emmett King, character man, has been signed by Warner Bros. to play the part of Marie Prevost's father in their forthcoming production of "The Beautiful and Damned."

Estelle Taylor set about preparing one of the most elaborate wardrobes of her screen career for the role of "Rosita" which she is enacting in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," the new Preferred Picture which is being filmed as a Gasnier production.

Charles Chaplin has returned from a short vacation at Catalina, and is putting the final touches to his latest comedy for First National release. Charlie hasn't yet decided upon a title for it.

Ralph Cloninger, who recently completed "Hearts Aflame" with Reginald Barker, is recruited from his own stock company in Salt Lake City and Spokane. Mr. Cloninger played Fernand in "Monte Cristo."

Clarence Burton has been cast in a Warner Bros. production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned."

Tully Marshall will play the part of "Cross" Patch in the Warner Bros. production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel "The Beautiful and Damned," which William A. Seiter is directing.

George Williams signed contracts the other day to appear in 38 comedies of the two-reel length, working opposite Syd Smith in the Hall Room Boys series for Harry Cohn.

Pola Negri will shortly begin work on "Bella Donna," George Fitzmaurice's production for Paramount, adapted by Ouida Bergere from Robert Hichen's novel. Conrad Nagel plays the male lead.

Irving Ries has been engaged as cameraman for the new series of stories to be produced by G. M. "Billy" Anderson at Fine Arts.

O. O. (Bunny) Dull is assisting Frank Borzage at the Hollywood studios.

When Cullen finishes his present part with Harry Carey and starts making pictures as a star for Sherwood McDonald on the R-C lot, it is possible that Al Russell will direct.

Rose Gore has been cast to play a heavy woman in the Gladys Walton feature at Universal.

Eva Thatcher is working for Larry Semon in his present comedy.

Irving Cummings is working at the Hollywood studios. William Crinley is looking after his interests and is aided by Chas. Wulstenhulme. An all-star cast is in the production which will be the second of a series that the star-director has contracted to make for Universal.

William E. Aldrich, Pat Harmon and Eddie Peil are working at the Fine Arts studios with Charles R. Seeling productions.

John Herdman has a part in the latest western starring Pete Morrison. The actor claims he has not been idle for two months.

Charles R. Seeling has signed William Zung, Chinese artist, for a part in his latest dramatic feature, "The Purple Dawn," which he is directing at Fine Arts.

Thelma Worth, cousin to Betty Compson, has been engaged by Henry McCarty to enact the leading feminine role in the latest Lester Cuneo western, being produced at the Fine Arts studios.

Leontine Brown has been engaged by Jack C. O'Brien for a leading role in his American-Polish drama as yet untitled. She recently came from New York to enter the picture game after fifteen years' stage experience.

Marie Prevost reports a fishing trip last week which resulted in the usual fisherman's luck.

NEILAN NOT DIRECTING BLANCHE SWEET

As a result of the fact that Marshall Neilan recently photographed various camera tests of Blanche Sweet and has supervised her preliminary preparations in connection with her appearance on the screen in "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the impression has been evident that he is directing his wife in this production.

"It is not fair to the producers of the picture in which Miss Sweet is appearing to say that I am supervising her work before the camera in this photoplay and I would like to correct this impression," said Mr. Neilan.

The latest thing in dances, the "Mexican Minorca," will be seen on the screen for the first time in the Selznick production, "One Week of Love," which features Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle. It is the innovation of Senor Lascales and Senorita Sanchez, foreign dancing team.

Anna Q. Nilsson, who was seriously burned recently when she drove a locomotive through a forest fire for a scene in the Reginald Barker Production, "Hearts Aflame," has entirely recovered from her injuries and is now back at work on the Mayer studio lot. It was at first feared that Miss Nilsson would be disfigured or marked by the effect of the flames, but by good luck she has gotten through the experience without a blemish on her face, neck or shoulders which were badly seared when that portion of the engine cab beside the throttle caught fire.

Penrhyn Stanlaws is expected to bring his company back from location in San Francisco shortly, when further interior scenes and a big sequence of a fantastic nature, will be filmed at the studio for this Paramount photoplay in which Bebe Daniels is featured. Conrad Nagel, playing the male lead, and Ernest Torrence in a clown role of dramatic character, are both doing excellent work. This picture was adapted by E. A. Bingham and Ewart Adamson from the story by Katherine Newlin Burt.

NEW POLICY AT LOEW'S

Loew's State Theater will become an exclusive picture theater on Sunday, the 17th. With the last performance on Saturday, the 16th, the five vaudeville acts which have always been part of the regular program will be entirely eliminated, in accordance with a new policy recently inaugurated by Marcus Loew and affecting Loew's State Theater, Los Angeles, and Loew's Warfield Theater, San Francisco.

This new policy of operating solely as a high-class motion picture theater became effective in San Francisco on August 27th, and, according to report, the wisdom of Mr. Loew's action is clearly seen in the way San Francisco theater patrons are flocking to the Warfield.

E. C. Bostick, manager of Loew's State in Los Angeles, is completing final plans for the opening and promises theater-goers one of the most interesting and enjoyable openings in the history of the city.

The opening picture will be Rex Ingram's "The Prisoner of Zenda," made by Metro.

In order to make additional room for the Administration Department of the Lasky studio, a second story is being added to the main building facing Vine Street. When completed, this floor will house the auditing department, which is now on the lower floor. New and spacious offices will be arranged for various officials.

The stage has claimed Otto Lederer for a while, but we hope he will soon return to the screen.

Under the direction of Henry McCarty, Doubleday Productions, starring Lester Cuneo, left the Fine Arts studios this week for Keen's Camp, near Hemet, where at least a week will be spent filming exterior scenes for the company's latest western, as yet untitled. Thirty-two persons comprised the party.

Elaine Hammerstein and other members of the Selznick company, who are taking part in "One Week of Love," have left with George Archainbaud for the Yosemite, where scenes for the production will be filmed. With the completion of these scenes, the film will go to the cutting room to be made ready for showing.

Myron Selznick has received an offer from a New York theatrical producer for the dramatic rights to "Evidence," the production which Elaine Hammerstein was presented in a few months ago. "Evidence" was an original story written for the screen by Edward J. Montagne, associate editor of the Selznick scenario department.

A preview of Finis Fox's recently completed picture, "The Bishop of the Ozarks," was held at Hunley's theater in Hollywood last week and, according to a statement issued by the theater management, the picture brought a considerable number of favorable reports from the audience. Fox will soon start production of a new story at the Fine Arts studios.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR

Active participation by stars of the stage and screen in the National "Forget-Me-Not Day" of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, on Saturday, November 4th, has been pledged in numerous telegraphic messages and letters already received at the national headquarters of the organization with 100,000 of America's wounded and disabled heroes of the great war within its ranks.

C. Hamilton Cook, national commander of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, is directing the preliminary work of the "Forget-Me-Not Day" movement, which is to take place in every city and town in the United States, on November 4th, when all America will buy little "forget-me-nots." Establishment of clubrooms, creation of summer camps, relief of the wounded and disabled veterans, assistance for the unemployed, and numerous other projects are to be benefited by the coming "National Forget-Me-Not Day."

The Seeling company of fifteen went to San Francisco Tuesday night to work at Rio Visto on the Sacramento river and in Chinatown, San Francisco, for a week. The picture will be completed at the Fine Arts studio.

Jack Laughlin, New York producer, who has been associated with the Eastern studios, is now producer at Dalton's, Broadway, where he and June Laughlin his wife, are starred. They already have received several offers, which they are considering.

OFFICIALS SPONSOR SAN FRANCISCO PRODUCING

Mayor Rolph, the Board of Supervisors, and Chief of Police, Daniel O'Brien, as well as committees from the Chamber of Commerce and various civic associations of San Francisco were guests of the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation at the Strand Theatre last Tuesday evening.

The occasion was the first presentation in a San Francisco theatre of the initial comedy, "Pop Tuttle's Clever Catch," starring Dan Mason, produced by the Gerson Company, the only permanent resident film producing organization in San Francisco.

The Gerson Pictures corporation, since last February has been engaged in regularly turning out film comedies. Seven of these pictures, known as Plum Center Comedies have been filmed under the direction of Robert Eddy and beginning September 1st are being released to the exhibitors at regular intervals through Film Booking Offices of America.

Dan Mason, star of Plum Center comedies, released by F.B.O., is making personal appearances at the Strand Theatre in San Francisco, during the run of the first comedy of the series, "Pop Tuttle's Clever Catch," in that house. Mason is between pictures just now, having completed his seventh comedy and waiting to start on the eighth. He is appearing in character of "Pop Tuttle," the role he created for these comedies.

Chatter of Southland Folks - By.... Harry Burns

Charles J. Parrott is driving a classy limousine these days, and when one stops to think what Mr. Parrott has to be thankful for, just glance at this lineup. He is one of the leading directors of the Hal E. Roach studio; has two of the cutest daughters that the writer has had the pleasure of seeing grow up from tiny tots; owns his own home, beautifully located next to the hills; and Mrs. Parrott is, well, the sweetest . . . world. What could any one ask for better than this?

Eddie Gribbon is acting in a villainous way in the Johnny Walker company at the R-C studios, trying to put the kick into his work a la Wallace and Noah Beery style.

Fat Karr is still disporting his funny acting wares at the Fox studios.

John Brown worked in the Chris Martin picture for a couple of days, but, he had to have his trainer with him at all times, Bud White told John what to do, and the bear obeyed instructions to the last letter.

William Duncan has written finis to his last efforts at the Vitagraph and, after a brief rest, should be back on the lot once more.

Lige Conley was given a breathing spell in between pictures the other day by Jack White. The reason for this rest was that Jack White slipped away to the mountains, in the mean time Lige's bruises and bumps were given a chance to recover while he rested.

Cliff Elfelt has some great plans lined up for his units working at the Brentwood studios. J. B. Warner is to go on making the series that he started, and there will be other companies making anything from a feature to a short reel fun-film. Cliff just got back from New York, where he talked things over with his producers.

Chris Martin is being directed by Harry Burns in an Indian comedy drama of two reel duration. The company have been working on location, and expect to finish the story this week. Martin will take the picture to Mexico to release it, and bring back Mexican capital to make a series of such subjects.

George Nichols is working in "The Pride of Palomar," at the Hollywood studios.

Doc Joos expects to affiliate himself with a well known comedy producer. Then watch the fun, for Doc will be busier than a bird dog after a scent, and just doesn't know which way to turn first.

Gordon Mullen has joined the Ruth Roland company as character heavy. Gordon is making his first venture into serials. George Marshall is directing, with Joe McCloskey his assistant. They have been on location for the past week at Victorville.

Mervyn LeRoy, late of LeRoy and Cooper vaudeville brigade, acts as assistant to the assistant director, or sort of a handy Andy man about the Lasky Famous Players sets. His latest work was with George Fitzmaurice during the filming of "Kick In."

Al St. John and a company of seven slipped away from the Fox studios and journeyed up to the Sierra Mountains and fished and hunted in the hills. All voted Al a prince of a good fellow—it was he that footed the expenses for the trip. The company have started on another comedy. Jimmy Bryant has fixed up a set of block and tackle to do wire stuff which will mean greater safety to the actor.

Robert McGowan is on his eighth "Our Gang" comedy that he and Tom McNamara are making for Hal E. Roach.

J. A. Howe now signs his name to all comedies that he produces, just as Marshall Neilan and D. W. Griffith do on their features. Howe is alternating with James Davis in the handling of Paul Parrott, whom the Roach studios have high hopes of making into another star of the Harold Lloyd magnitude.

Larry Semon revealed some secrets on how to make successful comedies when one of the spectators asked, "What are the rudiments of making comedies that will be laughed at?" He said: "Let your actors act natural, and put their own personality into their scenes. Don't rehearse them until they become mechanical, but let them ad-lib their action. Start your picture at a certain tempo and never let it drop until the final scene has been screened, and you have a picture that theatergoers will enjoy."

Clyde Cook returned from the East where he had Bonesetter Reese adjust his injured limb and is now able to start working on a comedy that he just started when he met with the accident.

Sam J. Mintz, brother to Jack, played in "You'll Never Know," which is being produced by Vitagraph with Earle Williams as the star.

Jack Duffey turned to a new line of endeavor, when he acted as barber and trimmed Reginald Lyons' mustache so it looked as though he had visited one of the city's best tonsorial parlors. The pair are working with Larry Semon, and when the boys saw that Jack was a handy fellow with the scissors, they lined up and wanted everything from a haircut to trimming their upper lip adornments.

Danny Crimmons played the proprietor of a French restaurant, while Bull Montana was the cook in a Hunt Stromberg comedy which Hughey Fay is directing at the Metro studios.

Billy Armstrong seems entrenched at Fox's and is lined up to stay there for some time. The funster was going great at Sennett's when they closed down for a brief spell, and he turned his attentions to the Sunshine comedy lot.

H. M. Horkheimer has the producing bug working again and was about the Fine Arts studios looking over some sets and talking things over with some of the people that he expects to do business with in the near future.

Art Acord was out at Universal the other day, by the aid of a cane, and said that he is feeling very fit considering the accident he had lately. It looks as though Art won't be able to work for some time if outer appearances are to be taken for any value, as to making a decision.

Peggy Coleman made up part of the acting artillery on the Harry Carey set the other evening at the R-C studio.

Joe Harris and Vester Pegg are playing a couple of villains for Harry Carey in his present picture.

Rollie Asher and Al Santell are taking the Hall Room Boys company to Frisco to film some scenes.

Ed Labbe, owner of the Kiser studios of Portland, is a Southland visitor, and Joe O'Donnell showed him the making of motion pictures in Hollywood.

Clyde McAttee registered his hundred and forty-fifth butler role, when he filled such a position for Eric Von Stroheim at the Universal.

Chas. (Dick) Rush is directing Dick Hatton in a five-reel western. Hatton is the star, and takes a hand in the direction as well.

Scott M. Beal finished at Long Beach where he was aiding Hampton Del Ruth produce a five-reel feature, and with this out of the way Scott returns to the Thos. H. Ince fold to take up his old position with one of the Ince directors.

Eddie Sowders and Jack Sullivan have had their hands full supplying the demands of Eric Von Stroheim, who has started working on a much improved schedule to what he started off on "Foolish Wives."

Ed Yeager has plenty of help to make "The Harvest Barn Dance," that the Reliable Photoplayers Association are to hold the 16th of this month, at the Fine Arts studios, a great big success. A number of committees have been appointed and they are bringing in encouraging reports of a banner sized crowd "Buying tickets for the doin's."

Irving Pringle has been cast for the Eric Von Stroheim story at Universal. Irving has got to have his hair cut so that he will look exactly like they did in the days of Franz Joseph's rule.

Stanley Laurel has hit the mark with his comedies under the managerial wing of G. M. Anderson. Last Monday they started another subject at the Fine Arts studios with Gilbert Pratt directing, Percy Pembroke as studio manager and Fred Church as business representative. The latter is soon to go to New York in the interests of the Anderson-Laurel comedies.

Walter Wilkinson has a pet rooster and some trained ducks who trail him wherever he goes. New York artist passing by the Wilkinson home the other day was so impressed with that combination, that he hired Walter and his animal pals to pose for him.

Stories First

"CONSCIOUS of the public and exhibitor outcry about the decline in the quality of the stories produced into motion pictures, we have made certain that our producers obtained the right material to meet the public favor. Since quality of story was the first essential, the matter of direction was held in abeyance. Having the stories that would measure up to the public demand, we then set out to see that the right stories went to the right directors. This welding together of factors was slow but definite.

"We have provided and counselled producers to make stories that afford legitimate, strong drama; pathos, romance, adventure, fun and humor; vigorous action. All of these, strong stories and clean.

"To gain strength, none of our producers have had to resort to dirt, vulgarity, commonness or cheapness."

This is not evidence in favor of the story first by a manufacturer. It is from the pen of F. B. Warren, vice-president of the American Releasing Corporation, an organization which must meet public approval with its products or fail.

Here is a corporation risking its very existence upon the products it handles, depending entirely, primarily, upon the story itself. Mr. Warren not only thus testifies, but does so in the first annual announcement of that corporation.

But Walter E. Greene, president, has something to say anent the many subjects to be offered for public approval. One extract is as interesting to writers as anything which has been published in the past year.

"The screen has ample brains in its authorship division, but is under-supplied with the proper makers of screen blueprints—continuity writers," says President Greene.

"Great motion pictures are, and always will be a matter of perfectly constructed continuities plus directorial intelligence. When the industry starts from there, it will finish far above the present level of story standards in motion pictures.

"With this demanded improvement of continuities based upon and built from good stories must come new types of stories; not a whipping over and over of the parent and "type" stories that prevail so widely now. The producer mind in America must change, and change drastically.

"The collective mind of American audiences has undergone a great change. It has wearied of the fare that producers are providing.

"Distributors know this better than producers, many of whom are working 3000 miles away in California. A distributor senses and touches his exhibitor market from a thousand points of contact."

President Greene strikes upon one subject which has proven the secret worry of certain prominent manufacturers—the need of the advanced continuity writer. Unpreparedness for a great change, which was bound to occur, is responsible.

Now that much damage has been done, the scramble to lock the barn has begun.

The official corroborates Camera! in the declaration that there is ample brain in the authorship division.

But, the matter of a receptive circle in the studio, to welcome the good story instead of

You cannot halt a slump with an outpouring of promise without performance. Only the writer with the better story, and the producer who is willing to abandon the old treadmill, can do that.

meeting it with a chip on the editorial shoulder, or the personal likes and dislikes of several other humans in the studio acting as handicaps, is quite another thing.

They should call in the doctor for that ailment also.

No, Evangeline, you are wrong. Hokum is Egyptian for how come?

Characters

AMONG the "best sellers" of the screen, several quite recent productions have defied precedent to quite an extent, but nevertheless, have scored so definitely as to become remembrances.

It is doubtful if "Humoresque" and "The Good Provider" ever will be forgotten by the majority of people who witnessed these productions. And yet the secret history of the first picture reveals the fact that its sponsor had little or no faith in the outcome. After it literally lifted itself by its own boot-straps, to an exalted position among stellar productions, "The Good Provider" was sent forth by the same corporation with much more confidence.

You see, the Old Guard made a hard-and-fast rule that no screen production could—or should—succeed, unless it was ground out, foot by foot, according to practically the first set of regulations provided.

"Interesting but little story," has been the cause of many rejections at the hands of the studio. But certain people—and they were few—decided that the manuscript of strong appeal was good enough for the screen, regardless of ancient screen rules.

Therefore not only were the above two productions sent on their way to shatter precedent and make for success over a new route, but others have followed which, in the picture sense, did not carry "much of a story."

Then came along one, Rupert Hughes, who had discovered for himself what the people wanted by writing books that could not come off the press fast enough to supply the demand.

He dipped into the game until he was able to direct. Thereupon he proceeded to write "Come On Over," which little piece he then transferred to the film. If any old-time manufacturer had read the synopsis of "Come

On Over," he would have gasped in horror to discover that Hughes was going to spend real money to produce the same.

But old-timers being a portion of the film ailment at present, none knew that the Hughes story, or odds and ends of certain other persons' stories, was another photoplay as sure fire as "Humoresque" and others of its class.

For it was characterization, and that something which attends it, which put these productions over.

They were unfoldments, which stirred the heart instead of the pulse.

To the writer who knows his business, an unusual character is filled with possibilities. It radiates from some peculiar member of the human race. Perhaps it is not an old character, but a person upon whom such great burdens are imposed as to incite the pity of the writer who visualizes him or her.

From characterization, and the situation in which the imaginative writer is bound to find them, flows the so-called story. And characterization has practically proven the success of half a dozen screen productions in the past three years.

Frequently a character in a cast, apart from the leads, actually sways the pendulum across the line from mediocrity to success.

Therefore, if eager students everywhere, including those who so constantly ask "Camera!" for a guide book to the royal road of success in photoplay writing, will study characterization upon the screen, analyze its relationship to the story and probe for the secret of its worth, they may get a new angle upon screen stories.

Many a screen success has been written from a single characterization conjured up by a writer and used practically as the corner stone of his foundation.

Don't title your arctic story, "A Summer's Song," or your ocean tale "Through Trackless Wastes." In other words, avoid bad examples.

Letters Home—No. 1

Dear Analine: I guess you'll be sirprised to hear I have quit the garage and gone in for skenario writing. Some other grease hound now can have my formerly previous job.

There ain't nothing to it, writing photoplays. All you got to do is to get some actorine in mind, say Threda Barer, and have her get a eye on some husbind. Of course he squorms but her eye and the clothes she don't wear does the bizness.

Wile the society stuff as per above is running along all O. K., shoot in some scenes from the garden of Eding or Cleo Patrick in a boat lamping King Squatro, with a adder concealed on her person.

Of course it don't mean anything to your story, but you ought to see the money they can spend on them intrusive episodas.

Go back to your victims onct in a wile, but don't forget to show the fall of Rome before you git done.

Then mail it in and collect your check.

Will let you know when I collect my first one.

Yours,
"CRANKSHAFT" JOE.

Make your story believable as well as human.

Pulse of the Studios

For Week Starting Monday, September 18

Professionals are requested to report to Camera! by phone or letter experiences with any company or studio that professes to teach acting, that is operated by non-professional persons, or that does not utilize players in its productions.

Camera! intends to keep the Pulse of the Studios accurate in every detail. You can help by promptly reporting any error to Pulse Editor, 595-179.

People

Madame Rosa Rosanova, who played Rodolph Valentino's mother in "Blood and Sand," will be featured in "Hungry Hearts" when that Goldwyn production is released here some time next month.

Arthur Edmund Carewe, who just finished with Jackie Coogan, is motoring through the northern part of the state before beginning a new production.

Theodore Kosloff brings to the screen a picturesque villain in his characterization of Lord Carnal in "To Have and To Hold" in which he is co-featured with Betty Compson and Bert Lytell.

"Mother" Sylvia Ashton who "cooked" her way into the movies is compiling a book of her own recipes to put on the market this fall.

Aside from his duties as director of "The World's A Stage" Elinor Glyn's romance of Hollywood Movie Life which Colin Campbell is directing for the Principal Pictures Corp. at the United Studios. Colin Campbell will also cut, edit and title the production.

Clarence Kolster, film editor at the Warner Bros. studio, is rapidly getting Wesley Barry's last picture into shape for an early preview. It was titled, "Little Heroes of the Street."

Edwin Zunn, at Fine Arts with the Seeling Productions was a candidate of the Royal Academy of Art and Literature, Peking, China, and was also educated at Boston University and Harvard. Since the Chinese revolution of 1912 he has been a poet and actor-playwright, and has staged several plays with remarkable success. He has appeared on the English speaking stage with various dramatic companies in the East.

Arthur Edmund Carew has completed his role of the celebrated violinist in the new Jackie Coogan production. Mr. Carew plans to motor to Frisco before starting a new picture.

Helen Dale has finished her first picture with the Eddie Lyons company, opposite Bobby Dunn, at the Berwilla studios, and is preparing to start work on the second of the series immediately.

Lloyd Talman has returned from San Francisco where he spent several weeks with his folks. Many favorable comments have been made on his portrayal of "Allan O'Dale" in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" and doubtless his work here will open the way to bigger opportunities.

Kathleen Key who has been cast to play in the coming Warner production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," which William A. Seiter is directing, spent a year in Australia with the Snowy Baker productions.

Marie Prevost's spare time is being taken up in learning the art of staying on the top of an aquaplane. For the edification of the novice an aquaplane is one of those boards attached to the stern of a launch on which one stands (or tries to stand) while the boat travels at the rate of thirty knots per hour. "It is thrilling," says Marie, "especially when ones chin collides with the edge of the board."

Frank Capra is cutting and editing the seventh of the Plum Center comedies, just completed by Robert Eddy at the Gerson studios in San Francisco for F. B. O. release.

Doris Deering, screen ingenue, has entered the ranks of matrimonial life. Snowden Baxendale has caused her to change her name.

Marguerite de la Motte, the talented young actress who plays the leading feminine role in "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," the first of the Tom Forman productions for Preferred Pictures, is learning Chinese. Lon Chaney is taking the role of teacher between the scenes in which he enacts "Yen Sin," a Chinese philosopher.

Hernando G. Villa, artist, designed the unique Cafe of the Deep to be seen in Katherine MacDonald's new First National production.

James P. Hogan will soon get busy directing a western feature.

Contemporary Criticisms

"THE VALLEY OF SILENT MEN" (Paramount)

"Mystery, strong dramatic situations, straightforwardness of plot and unusually effective scenes of snow-clad mountains, are the outstanding points of the Cosmopolitan production, 'The Valley of Silent Men.' It is based on a James Oliver Curwood story and has the virility and red-bloodedness characteristic of this author's work.

"As was to be expected from Frank Borzage, the direction is excellent; he has stuck closely to the main theme without running in any diverting out-ofside matter and has held the suspense and mystery well.

"Alma Rubens gives a fine performance as the only feminine character. Particularly effective is her repressed work. . . . Lew Cody, better known for his work as a heavy, also proves excellent in a straight heroic role."

—Moving Picture World.

"The pictorial appeal of the 'Valley of Silent Men' is every where here. It actually dwarfs the story which concerns a couple of mounties chasing a mountie and the girl of his choice. Borzage has hidden the rusty machinery of the plot fairly well. He starts you off tingling with suspense because of the man hunt.

"Curwood seldom varies in his plots. Consequently the steady follower of his stories can anticipate the end far in advance."

—Motion Picture News.

"Of course you have the great outdoor stuff which Curwood always uses, and director Borzage has found some great locations including a magnificent snow-clad glacier. Chester Lyons has used a telephoto lens with mighty good result, and some of the shots drew applause from the audience for their sheer beauty alone.

"This is one of the best pictures recently shown which holds the atmosphere of suspense so well.

"Alma Rubens is quite satisfying. At times she is very beautiful. Lew Cody as usual does very good work. . . . Mario Majeroni does a character bit very well."

—Film Daily.

"FORTUNE'S MASK" (Vitagraph)

"The fact that the action is kept moving swiftly is a saving grace in this picture. One doesn't stop to consider the impossibility of many of the situations. Earle Williams has been given a good role in this picturization of a popular O'Henry tale. He gets a lot out of the character of Dicky Maloney, who returns to his father's land to 'kick out' the gang of intriguers. The selection of Patsy Ruth Miller for the principal feminine was a fortunate one. Patsy makes an ideal senorita and she is one of the brightest spots in the picture.

"The settings, while not elaborate, are adequate. The costuming is correct in detail, especially the uniforms of the officials. . . . Oliver Hardy as the Commandante is amusing at times."

—Motion Picture News.

"A rather amusing comedy drama with Williams in the role of a care free young Irishman who figures in the overthrow of a government in a Central America country. Light and whimsical entertainment with a number of comedy situations such as this type of picture affords.

"Earle Williams has a role that is quite away from the parts he is usually given. He is supposed to be a dashing young Irishman and to carry the part wears a wig throughout the picture. The result is that his followers are due to be somewhat disappointed in his appearance.

"In spite of these handicaps the star manages to inject considerable energy into the picture and it should prove a pleasing and amusing diversion."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"EAST IS WEST" (First National)

"Now that it has been screened and has the popular Constance Talmadge in the role of Ming Toy, it leaves little to be desired in the way of entertainment.

"Throughout the picture Miss Talmadge gives an excellent, conscientious performance of a part that could be easily overplayed. With all 'East is West' is a distinct brilliant in the established crown of Constance Talmadge.

" . . . The photography, too, is above the average and there are many unusually striking shots.

" . . . Both Nigel Barrie and Edward Burns fully measure up to the requirement of their parts. E. L. Warren as Lo San Kee, and Frank Lanning as Hop Toy, are impressive."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"'East Is West' as a play was a prodigious success. 'East Is West' in film form should equal, if not exceed, the stage version in popularity. The picture has everything the play had and a little bit more.

" . . . The result is an artistic achievement that has every possible element for unusually wide popularity.

"Beginning with Frances Marion's scenario down through each step in the production, embracing Sidney Franklin's direction, capable editing and titling extraordinarily fine performances by the star and supporting cast, and artistic photography by Antonio Gaudie, there has been brought to bear a keen perception of showmanship that makes 'East Is West' easily one of the outstanding pictures of a year.

"Constance Talmadge is delightful as Ming Toy, realizing every possibility, latent or obvious, that the unusually rich role contains. For sheer sparkle she exceeds anything she has done before in comedy dramatic work. . . . One of the finest character performances ever reflected on a screen is contributed by Warren Oland in the extremely difficult role of Charlie Yong, the 50-50 American-Chinaman. His work leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. E. A. Burns deserves special mention for a sincere natural performance that is gratifyingly unactorish."

"It is easily Constance Talmadge's finest achievement and her greatest portrayal since the mountain maid in 'Tolerance'.

"The picture carries so much charm, so much opulence, that even if you saw the play you are certain to call the new version a greater achievement insofar as its background and atmosphere are concerned.

"The photography is of a de luxe quality. Sidney Franklin has brought forth the clamour of the East in vivid style. His Chinatown is truly atmospheric. And the manner in which he guides his players shows that he had his eye upon the correct dramatic values. Witness Warner Oland as Charlie Yong, the heavy of the story. This capable character actor, who can interpret the Chinaman more realistically than any other player, will receive an ovation everywhere."

—Motion Picture News.

"'East Is West' ought to be a smashing hit for Connie Talmadge. She does easily the best work of her career in this big production. There may be some difference of opinion coming from those who saw the stage play, as to the liberties taken in the characterization of Ming Toy, as presented by Connie. . . .

"Warner Oland's . . . mincing walk, his gestures, his complete indifference as the dandified Chinaman and the Oriental with a background of villainy make him stand out strongly. His is the best work in the entire picture.

"Frances Marion, always dependable, presented a scenario evidently intended to fit Connie. And it does . . . she is delightful."

—Film Daily.

"RICH MEN'S WIVES" (Lichtman)

"In 'Rich Men's Wives' Gasnier obviously determined not to rely upon lavishness and pictorial beauty to make his picture a success. On the contrary he has developed a story and a group of characterizations, together with a number of big dramatic effects.

"The production is big, lavish and well done throughout. Commencing with what at first is a rather slow-moving story. . . . Gasnier has speeded up the action and one master stroke follows another, creating a series of dramatic effects that stamp the production as a striking attraction."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"They will probably compensate for a story which is too trite and often stupid and which never gets down to the core of its subject matter—the 'paying the piper among the wealthy disciples of jazz.' It is only suggested, and so much incident and background are planted in the introductory reels that the plot seems to be an arbitrary side issue.

What Folks Think

Picks Pictures From Review

DENVER, Colo., Sept. 5.—Editor Camera!—Every week bright and fresh Camera! comes to me, and I wish to tell you how much I enjoy reading it. The reviews by R. W. are truthful and illuminating, pleasing and instructive. Once upon a time I mailed a check for $3 to the Moving Picture World. Foolishly they returned it and refused to send me the publication. I am now trading my Camera! to a friend for his M. P. W.—and the best part is, he tells me he is getting more information hot off the griddle from Camera!, as it helps him in his selection of pictures for his theater—and no "apple sauce."

This leads to the thought, why not have a small paper to sell to the real paying public, giving short, sharp, cryptic reviews, so they can better judge the pictures they wish to buy tickets for.

I shall induce our clubs here to subscribe for Camera! so the members can consult that paper and give me a rest, as I have gained the reputation of knowing good pictures.

E. P. VARIAN.

Likes Hays Editorial

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Aug. 28.—Editor Camera!—I returned from a month's vacation last week and could not help noticing as I read the back numbers of Camera! what progress the paper had made. Your fearless editorial regarding Hays was splendid. Everywhere among the guild members one hears comments on the Camera! that reflects credit on you. I am certain you are doing a fine work for picture people and that they appreciate it—at least I do, and wish you all the success your efforts deserve.

ADELINE M. ALVORD.

Hays Likes It, Too

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—Editor Camera!—Thanks for your invitation, "Come Again," as printed in the Camera! of July 29. I certainly will want to again visit the coast. The real enthusiasm and splendid spirit of co-operation among those friends and co-workers I met there moved me very deeply. I am tremendously in earnest in this whole matter, and my one great wish is to be of any possible service. I am grateful for your co-operation.

WILL H. HAYS.

Along the Rialto

By Raymond McKee

Bryant Foy, of the Foy family, is now making up Komicke Kracks for the Fox Sunshine comedies.

Jack Bergen, who doubled for stars in and around Fort Lee, should have starred in his own little drama and sent a double to the home of George Kline where he was killed. There is no doubt that Kline knew his business as a location man, at any rate he found a vital location when he sent the "45" spinning into Bergen. The entire true story will come out when Jersey Justice holds court.

It is reported that a popular dance rendezvous has offered Valentino $3,000 weekly to appear there nightly. Ruddy is stopping at the Waldorf Astoria.

New Yorkers have long anticipated the coming of Harold Lloyd's latest, "Grandma's Boy." Now they are happy. It will be at the Strand next week.

September 10th will witness a banquet held in New York at the N. V. A. Club. Men from every business will be present to honor Fred Stone. Will Rogers will be toastmaster. The list of guests includes President Harding, Woodrow Wilson, Governors Miller and Edwards, Mayor Hylan, Rex Beach, Geo. M. Cohan and many others.

TORONTO'S THEATRICAL OFFERINGS

By David Bader—Camera's Traveling Correspondent

"The Prisoner of Zenda" has been playing here for the past two weeks at the Massey Hall. The picture is doing well considering that the National Toronto Exhibition is running in opposition. The picture plays twice daily.

Part of the entertainment at the annual Toronto Exhibition which takes in music by West Indies Bands, Creators' Band, Scottish Bands, Clowns, and a wonderful Prince of Wales Durbar, are a series of Century Comedies presented to the Fair by the local Exchange. "A Radio Hound" is being shown at the Radio and Sports Show, and "A Muddy Bride" with Baby Peggy is being shown at the Grand Stand. Brownie is the star of "A Radio Hound." Other entertainment is a musical contest and radio broadcasting.

"Loves of Pharaoh" are running their loving course at the Strand here. This picture is scheduled for a two week run, and likewise faces a small house due to the Exhibition.

"Sherlock Brown" played to good houses at Loew's State.

"A Bachelor Daddy," "For the Defence," "When Satan Sleeps," and others, are all playing to small houses. These two weeks here in Toronto are very bad for the silent and spoken drama.

"Orphans of the Storm," at Shea's here, played to a fair house. This picture played two weeks, and will be superceded by Lady Diana's latest picture.

"The Blushing Bride" is playing here prior to its opening of Buffalo's theatrical season. This show was well received, although it only played one week. It will be followed by "The Bat," which Los Angeles has already seen. This is a corking melo-mystery drama.

"The Dumbell Review for 1922," composed of ex-Canadian boys, has played here more than 20 weeks. It will either go to New York or London, after its run which terminates next week. No one has offered to buy the motion picture rights yet.

Everything is closed Sunday in Toronto. Great town, not.

ON BUFFALO'S BROADWAY

The Fall season will soon take hold in Buffalo, and "legitimate" is headed this way. Burlesque, stock companies and Shubert vaudeville will be ushered in within the coming week.

Jean Bedini's "Chuckles of 1922" is due here on August 31st. This show has just finished playing the English Music Halls, and is awaited with open arms.

Buffalo theatres are doing fairly well. There have been some very warm days, and business in the afternoon, in some theatres, was very quiet.

"Orphans of the Storm," Griffith's classic, is playing the Shea theaters. The picture is celebrating the eighth anniversary of Shea's Hippodrome theater.

Charlie Ray's "Deuce of Spades" will run a full week at the Lafayette theater, where first class vaudeville also reigns supreme. Ray is very popular here.

The Majestic Theater, Buffalo's theater of stock company's presentation of successes, will probably open with "The Star Sapphire." Other famous plays, such as "Abraham Lincoln," "Six Cylinder Love," "The Elusive Lady," "The French Doll," and others will play here the coming season.

A big year is expected, but it looks as though motion pictures will continue to lead. "Blood and Sand," "Human Hearts," "Grandma's Boy," "In the Name of the Law," "Little Red Riding Hood," "The Old Homestead," "The Prisoner of Zenda" and others are booked to play this city in the near future.

"The Storm" is booked into 20 houses for simultaneous playing.

WHAT HAPPENED ON THE SET TODAY?

It got a laugh, or it got the director's goat, or something.

Don't wait for the publicity man to hear about it—write it on a post card, address CAMERA!, Hollywood, drop it in the mailbox—pronto!

Story By

Eve Unsell, head of B. P. Schulberg's story producing department, and Hope Loring, of short story fame, are jointly responsible for the remarkable screen version of "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," now being filmed as a Preferred Picture. The two writers are collaborating on the scenario of the Wilbur Daniel Steele story, which was selected as the honor story of Edward J. O'Brien's recent list of greatest American short stories.

Edward J. Montagne, author of "One Week of Love," "Evidence," "Under Oath," and other Selznick productions, got his early schooling by working for several of the New York dailies, and once published a weekly paper of his own.

The story which Bosworth is doing under the working title of "The Beloved Unknown" was written by Ethel Gillett Whitehorn, daughter of a former governor of California, and the scenes were taken on the exact spot where the scenes of the story were laid.

Glenn Lambert has moved his scripts and ideas to the Berwillia studio where he is gag man for Eddie Lyons and Bobby Dunn. Prior to this he and Maury Roth were writing for Al St. John at the Fox studios.

Henry McCarty is proving to his friends that he is as proficient a writer as he is a director. The last five stories made by Doubleday Productions, starring Lester Cuneo, were written as well as directed by Mr. McCarty.

"The Little Church Around the Corner," an original story by Olga Printzlau, is being put into production shape at the Warner Bros. studio and actual photographing will start soon.

Edward M. Kimball and Mrs. Kimball (Alyse Hunt Whitaker) are building a new home on Childs avenue, Hollywood, where provision for a large studio, to entertain their friends, has been made.

TITLE CHANGES

"If I Were Queen," from "The Three-Cornered Kingdom." (Ethel Clayton for F. B. O.)

"The White Flower" is the title which has been accorded Betty Compson's next Paramount star picture. This photo-drama was written expressly for her by Julia Crawford Ivers, who spent several months in Hawaii studying the locale. The exteriors will all be filmed in the Hawaiian Islands, principally in Honolulu. James C. Van Tress is to be the cameraman, and further details are to be announced shortly.

OFFICERS GET CINEMA CICERONE

For a small sum the youthful son of well-to-do English parents can be provided with a cinema cicerone to take him to the pictures and explain anything that mystifies him, Ormesby Burton writes the New York Morning Telegraph from London.

A thorough knowledge of Yankee slang for the interpretation of American subtitles is said to be a requisite.

Out-of-work ex-officers of the Officers' association get the jobs.

Starting in January, children may attend pictures in London only when accompanied by an adult.

Harry Myers had some rather interesting experiences in Vienna from whence he has just returned. "A good deal of fun is had at the expense of the government and the sudden drop their money has taken," says Harry. "The favorite joke over there is about the government money printer who was on the verge of starvation because he couldn't get his salary and had threatened to quit until the government compromised with him. He was to print money for the government five days out of the week and the sixth he could print his salary."

Although Charles Seeling had already shot fifty scenes of "The Purple Dawn," he started all over Tuesday when Eddie Peil strolled on the set. Seeling had despaired of obtaining Peil, and started with another actor in the principal Chinese role.

"The Birth of Cinematography" was the title of a five-page story in the Illustrated London News heralding an exhibition in South Kensington Museum of various inventions which made possible the evolution of motion pictures.

Percy Pembroke is assisting Gil Pratt in the direction of stories starring Stan Laurel at Fine Arts.

NEW PLACE TO PLANT PHOTOS

Pictures of motion picture folk at home, engaged in sports, or doing anything the average human being does, are desired by Linton Wells, manager of the Pacific bureau Pacific and Atlantic Photos, Inc., with office at The Times, (not at 520 South Broadway, as first announced.)

He at all times wants photographs of news value or of freak or unique appeal.

In the near future Wells will be in the market for full page layouts for rotogravure service.

All pictures must be exclusive. Wells promises to accept or return in 24 hours.

Organized seven months ago by Joe Medill Patterson to serve the Chicago Tribune, the P. & A. now serves 40 papers (including the New York News) with fast mail photos, and distributes a mat service to over 100.

TAX CLOSES GERMAN THEATERS

Picture theaters of Hamburg and Berlin threaten to be darkened by the German tax on admissions.

Hamburg's theaters are now closed. Ninety percent of Berlin's have agreed to close September 22, according to The Los Angeles Times. The German admission tax has a sliding scale that reaches 50 percent on 30-mark tickets. Thirty marks are about two and a fifth cents at present.

The P. A.'s Friends

The Seattle (Wash.) Times is prepared to launch a morning paper on 72 hours notice, although it declares such move would be financially disastrous. The paper would compete with Hearst's Post-Intelligencer.

The Palm Beach (Fla.) Record will start publication about October 15.

The Lodi (Cal.) News is now a daily paper. Formerly tri-weekly.

Wilson Hicks has resigned from the Kansas City Star to join his brother, John W. Hicks, jr., Australian managing director of Famous Players-Lasky.

The Lard Laredo (Tex.) Morning News has started.

The Yewwester is a new daily planned for Key West, Fla.

HOW PAPERS LOOK AT IT

From a symposium gathered by Editor & Publisher, these attitudes of newspapers toward amusement publicity matter are gleaned:

Cleveland Plain Dealer—Publicity material offered by theaters for publication ought to be considered strictly on the basis of its news or entertainment value.

Des Moines Capital—Does not run a press agent column and accepts only such matter as seems to carry legitimate gossip of the theater.

Winfield (Kan.) Daily Free Press—Theaters and the movies are public institutions, which have a great share in shaping the morals of the community. They should not be treated as commercial institutions, but as moulders of opinion and institutions of public importance.

Winfield (Kan.) Courier—Theaters and motion picture houses are commercial enterprises, just the same as the dry goods store. Policy of printing advance notices is governed by the question, "Is it news?"

Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Republican—Believes readers are entitled to the theaters; handles it briefly.

Portland (Me.) Evening Express—There is a news side to drama, but from our experience the press agents try to get all the free space they can in the papers.

We've Lost Neutrality

NEUTRALITY has advantages.

But the motion picture industry is no longer politically neutral—not to the rest of the nation.

The motion picture is now Republican—it has a Republican boss.

It doesn't matter that the boss bosses a minority in the industry.

Whenever and wherever political matters affecting the screen arise, they will no longer be considered on their merits. They will be political issues.

Censorship and Sunday closing will no longer be argued for or against on moral or constitutional grounds. Republicans will be opposed to them; other parties in favor.

Admission taxes and film tariffs will no longer be discussed from the standpoint of good business and the nation's welfare—Republicans will be on one side, other parties on the other.

Censorship in Massachusetts will be voted upon November 7. That censorship is opposed to fundamental constitutional theories, will not enter into the matter. That motion pictures have a Republican boss, will.

What will we do about it?

It's up to organizations not affiliated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to make themselves heard. It's up to them to emphasize that they are not taking political sides.

We're all for motion pictures—not for or against whatever party is in office and wields power.

Action is necessary by existing organizations.

Interests not organized should become so.

Many Scripts in Your Desk?

GOOD will is a tremendous asset in the valuation of any business. Over $1,000,000 was paid in cash for the item of good will in the transfer of a big newspaper the other day.

Motion picture producers, apparently, have overlooked this valuable financial item. At least in minor points of contact with their public they neglect to properly build good will.

Take the one item of scenario reading and purchase or rejection. Trusting, ambitious writers submit hard-thought stories to the studios. They want to know one of two things: Is it acceptable for motion pictures, or isn't it?

Sometimes they find out, sometimes they don't.

The letter of Winona Boutree in the What Folks Think column, this issue, reflects the dilemma of thousands of writers.

Camera! ventures that in every studio in Hollywood there are scripts from 6 months to 6 years old tucked away in bottom drawers of desks in obscure offices. They were in the desks when present occupants took it over; no one knows why.

Here are thousands and thousands of well-meaning and ambitious persons submitting their heart-throbs (perhaps) to ruthless, sometimes careless, scenario editors;—and forming uncomplimentary opinions about motion picture courtesy and efficiency when they fail to hear from them again.

Why not have a house-cleaning, everybody!

Dig out all the scripts that are not your property. No matter if they're on wrapping paper in misspelled, penciled words, or the neatest typewritten product.

Someone is anxious about that story and should have it back, or a statement of its acceptability. Send them with a little apology, and say honestly whether or not you care to consider more originals from outsiders. Doing so will build that asset item of good will for you without fail.

Incidentally, if you have scripts on hand without addresses of their senders, give Camera! a list of titles and authors for publication, and owners will be invited to send postage for return of their works.

Film Capital Production Notes

MAE MURRAY TO FILM NEXT HERE

Mae Murray is in Hollywood with her husband-director Robert Z. Leonard, from New York. It is expected that Miss Murray will make several pictures for Metro release, probably at the Goldwyn studio. Miss Murray is under contract to Tiffany productions. Her most recently completed picture is "Broadway Rose."

Mack Sennett's "The Shriek of Araby" will be released through the exchanges of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., during the early fall. Ben Turpin is the featured comedian and Kathryn McGuire the leading feminine player.

This newest Sennett fun-maker satirizes Rodolph Valentino's masterful dramatic efforts in "The Sheik," with much subtleness.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are on their way to New York. They will stay east a month, seeing the Broadway premiere of "Robin Hood" the middle of October, and possibly the premiere of "Tess" a few weeks later. They will resume production at the western studio the middle of November.

Fairbanks' next is Booth Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire," on which Lotta Woods is now supervising research and script preparation.

Miss Pickford will do "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Jack Pickford will make his next picture in New York. He is looking for a story with strong human interest element for a young fellow predominating.

The last shot has been fired on Marshall Neilan's "The Strangers' Banquet," at the Goldwyn studio.

Billie Dove is preparing to start work in "All the Brothers Were Valiant," Ben Ames Williams' sea story which Irvin Yillat will direct.

The second release of a series of two-reel specials, in which little Arthur Trimble is starring for independent release, has been completed at Hollywood studio. Frederick G. Becker directed. Bessie Love, who headed the supporting cast of the first production, is also in the second.

The third production will be started as soon as the second is edited. The series will be marketed as "The Strange Adventures of Prince Courageous."

The new Jackie Coogan production, tentatively called "Fiddle and Me," has gone to the cutting room.

Frank J. Hampton and Dick L'Estrange, formerly with Selznick in New York, have come from the east to Los Angeles to form a Hampton, L'Estrange and Hampton Producing company. They will produce only five-reel specials adapted from well known popular novels. The specials will be directed by L'Estrange and supervised by Hampton; they will be released through State Rights.

Pola Negri will soon arrive from New York to begin work in George Fitzmaurice's production, "Bella Donna," by Robert Hichens, author of "The Garden of Allah." Ouida Bergere is getting her adaptation ready. Conrad Nagel will have the role of the husband.

Baby Peggy and Alf Goulding, her director, are hard at work on "Peg of the Movies."

"Pop Tuttle, Fire Fighter," one of the series of Plum Center Comedies that are being produced by The Paul Gerson pictures corporation of San Francisco, was shipped yesterday to New York.

START SHOOTING

"Glad Rags," by J. R. Lockwood, cameraman, under direction of Hughie Fay at Metro studio.

"The Beautiful and Damned," by DuPar and Dupont, cameramen, under direction of William Seiter at the Warner Brothers' studio.

"Paths of Glory," by L. Guy Wilky, cameraman, under direction of William deMille at Lasky studios.

Plum Center Comedies, by Roy Vaughan, cameraman, under direction of Robert Eddy at Paul Gerson studios, San Francisco.

"My American Wife," by A. L. Gilks, cameraman, under direction of Sam Wood at Lasky studio.

Robert Eddy, with his company of Plum Center Comedians, headed by Dan Mason, started work on the direction of the eighth of a series of twelve comedies at the Paul Gerson studios in San Francisco on Monday. Wilna Hervey, leading woman, has one of the principal roles; Edward O'Brien and Seldy Roach play important parts. A. H. Geibler furnished the scenario and continuity, and Roy Vaughan is doing the camera work.

Monty Banks is preparing to start filming a new comedy which he announces will be a burlesque on "Blood and Sand." Monty has selected "Flood and Sand" as the title of his picture.

The Sam Mogi Comedy company has started work on its first two-reel comedy production. Mr. Mogi, the director and producer is likewise cinematographer. He served a three-year apprenticeship to Mr. Georges Benoit, "The Double-Exposure King." Max Mogi plays the well-dressed, always hungry, always broke man about town and Bebe Ellen (Little Miss Smiles) the tiny lost heiress.

Jess Robbins has returned from an extended visit in New York. The Fine Arts studios will be his headquarters, and he is preparing to start work soon on a story in which Eddie Horton will appear as star.

Never since the days that D. W. Griffith occupied the plant has the Fine Arts studios shown so great an amount of production activity as at the present time. With nine companies engaged in filming stories there the studio management reports that every indication is that the plant will be filled to capacity within a very short time.

"Mud and Sand" is announced as the title of the latest two-reel comedy being produced by G. M. "Broncho Billy" Anderson at the Fine Arts studios with Stan Laurel as star. Gil Pratt is directing.

Current Reviews

"On the High Seas"

THE history of the original plot of "On the High Seas" dates back to the 1492 of pictures. Ten years ago the Imp company made a one-reeler titled "The Lady and the Stoker." This was followed up by a two-reel product and so on at intervals until we found it hiding under the Lasky-Willat awning with enough tinsel grandeur surrounding it to fool the public once more. But it takes more than a foggy glory to repeat one story time and time again. In fact, we heard a fan remark as he yawned and scratched his head as though puzzled: "Haven't I seen this somewhere before," to which his convoy replied that he was mistaken, the producer had changed the cast.

Irvin Willat's direction is not at fault but it is just flat. We expected more of the director who once made real sea pictures.

The triteness of the story may be laid to the fact that this is Edward Sheldon's first original story. Naturally he would choose the most reliable old standby. (Here it is.) The lady falls in love with the stoker (because he's the only man in sight, we guess) and because he saves her from the wreck (this might mean the ship or her fiancé) she swears eternal love. But on land she becomes a lady and he gets the air until she finds he is only an adventurer looking for atmosphere in the hold of the ship. So all's well. If you can stand that much of it!

Dorothy Dalton had an easier time and was more natural when she wore the garb of a shipmate. But as a society woman she had difficulty in impressing us that she was at home in gorgeous clothes.

We knew that Jack Holt was the hero all the time even though he didn't wear a full-dress suit till the last scene. He had a homely part but he worked well and made himself liked.

Other members of the cast were: Mitchell Lewis, Alice Knowland, Vernon Tremain, James Gordon, Otto Brower, William Boyd, Winter Hall, and Michael Dark.

The photography of the sea stuff is wonderful in the stuff it catches of ships sinking but there is no opportunity for lighting effects.

R. W.

"Wanted—A Story"

WHEN Mason Litson wrote and directed "Wanted—A Story," he meant it. He not only wanted a story but was in painful need of one to produce the two reels on the material at hand. However, credit goes to Litson, in this Johnny Jones-McDonald production for getting away with it and supplying in direction what is lacking in plot. Had the satirical trend been followed throughout the film, this kid comedy would have turned out to be one of the long-looked-for burlesques on South Sea island pictures. As it is, he brings us a refreshing frothy satire of the coming tribe of films that look more like an epidemic to us than the Sheik or NW Mounted variety.

The same kiddies supply the cast as for-running McDonald pictures.

Johnny Jones, the shining light among his gang, continues his amusing and talented work.

Gertrude Messinger is entrancing in her leopard skin dress. Our only complaint is that these two clever kids are crowded out by using grownups in this production.

Benny Alexander is a pleasant surprise as a newcomer to "the gang" and he is right in his element for Benny has marked talent that will not be overlooked with this company.

Kenneth Green is still the hungry, overfed boy that had many tears of laughter to his credit.

R. W.

"The Prisoner of Zenda"

LIVING up to a sudden reputation is difficult going, especially if you are a director whose first hit is a masterpiece. The public is too prone to expect something fully as good forever thereafter, if not better. And audiences are liable to prove critical if this does not happen.

This danger never was more apparent than in the case of Rex Ingram, whose latest production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," will be somewhat of a disappointment to a majority of patrons.

It is not a special, in the full sense of the word, and carries neither the fire nor coloring of "The Four Horsemen," although a mythical kingdom, and a plot conveniently provided by Anthony Hope, lays itself wide open to feverish excitement and vividness.

However, the production is a very good program feature, although it is a full blown member of the hokum family, filled with convenient situations and hurrahs-for-our-side.

Had the continuity writer or Ingram gone beyond the ordinary limits of the story itself, adding to its possibilities and giving certain situations and characterizations greater values—which was entirely possible—the young director's repute easily would have maintained its level.

One big misfortune attends the production which, otherwise, will please a majority of people. During the sword fight between Rassendyll and the three plotters, the hero, while flat on his back, flips his sword at "Black Michael." The weapon flies through the air and through the big fellow. The audience laughs heartily.

Lewis Stone, as Rassendyll, who takes the king's place upon the throne and foils the plotters, is very satisfactory, although Author Hope's book described a little different type of man.

Alice Terry is a sweet and competent Princess Flavia. No one in the audience could blame the young Englishman for falling in love with this winsome young woman, even had not a crown been in sight.

"Colonel Sapt," the beloved character of the book, whose gruffness covers a heart of gold, is well portrayed in face and person by Robert Edeson. He is an actor, but is not guided into the essence of the characterization painted so warmly by Anthony Hope.

Nothing could be added to the performance of Stuart Holmes as "Black Michael." He gives a masterly performance.

Ramon Navarro is reported to have been "discovered" by Ingram. If true, the director is a nifty picker once more. As "Rupert of Hentzau" this devil-may-care young man is admirable. The ladies certainly liked him.

Lois Lee is splendid as "Countess Helga;" Barbara La Marr, Malcolm McGregor and Edward Connelly fit into the production very smoothly.

R. W.,

"Burning Sands"

ANOTHER desert drama from the Lasky "The Sheik," but the connection, if stronghold. Heralded as the sequel to there is any, is certainly very vague. All in all this picture gets the first honors, however, and has a strong entertainment value.

Milton Sills is great as the English desert hermit, and some of his shots are really marvelous. The part seems to have been waiting for Sills, and it is doubtful if there is any other actor who could have done so well here.

Wanda Hawley, in the part of the debutante English girl, lacks sincerity, and her work consists, for the greater part, of sighs, sobs and sorrow. She seemed to hang on to the picture like a tail on a kite. There is no doubt whatsoever that the feminine end was upheld admirably by Jacqueline Logan in the part of a French dancing girl, and it is needless to say she looked okeh.

Cecil Holland did good work as the aged sheik, while Harry Holland was convincing as the head of the rival tribe.

Robert Cain was the villain, but that's about all we can say.

Winter Hall and Louise Dresser had small parts. Mr. Hall, as Lord Blair, gave a strong, true performance, but Louise Dresser seemed too expressionless, though she had a difficult part.

"The Beauty Shop"

HAS the day come when we can publish "funny" stories in film and get away with it?

"The Beauty Shop" says we can. The lines of the frothy stage production prove entirely effective when used as subtitles upon the screen, and get nine out of ten laughs. The audience is in a hilarious mood all the time during the film showing, despite the fact that situation and action provide but comparatively few of the giggles.

Of course Raymond Hitchcock is at the fore continually, but Louise Fazenda provokes more merriment through action.

The cast is all dressed up. Montague Love is the ridiculous "heavy," and runs away with it, as in more serious work. Billy Van, as the undertaker looking for someone to bury, is corking. Jim Corbett and the dancing Fairbanks sisters complete the cast.

The story is too well known to call for comment.

COMING REVIEWS

Because space will not permit in this issue the following pictures will be reviewed in forthcoming issues: "The Eternal Flame," "My Old Kentucky Home," "Caught Bluffing," "Remembrance," and "My Friend the Devil."

Where to Find People You Know

Robert Kurrle has been selected to do the camera work on "All the Brothers Were Valiant," the Ben Ames Williams story which Irvin V. Willat is directing for Metro. Mr. Kurrle photographed many of the Bert Lytell pictures for Metro and more recently has been with Edwin Carewe.

Andree Tourneur has been cast in an important role in support of Viola Dana in her picturization of "Emmy Lou," and has started work before the Metro cameras. Miss Tourneur had just finished serving as a leading lady to Roy Stewart in two consecutive pictures.

Alan Hale, who has an important role in support of Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" and who is now enacting a villain in Shirley Mason's latest William Fox special, will soon return to playing leads in which line he distinguished himself in support of Mme. Nazimova.

Jacques D'Auray, who made his return to the screen in Gloria Swanson's coming release, "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," has been engaged to interpret a French character role in Sam Wood's new production, "His American Wife," starring Gloria Swanson.

Herbert Claiborne has just finished playing the juvenile lead in the latest Bible picture made by the Sacred Films at Burbank. He has also been cast for the part of Joseph in the largest episode of the whole series.

Cullen Landis will go to Universal to appear opposite Colleen Moore in "Forsaking All Others," when he has finished his part with Harry Carey, and then he will start on his starring contract with Robertson-Cole.

Miss Eva Novak is working at Lasky's taking some re-takes for the Jack Holt picture. She recently finished a part with Thomas Meighan, working on it at the same time that she started with Mr. Holt.

Adolphe Menjou is working at the Lasky lot in "Notoriety."

Orville Caldwell, who will be seen in the leading role in "The Lonely Road," has signed a contract under which he will appear in a similar capacity in "The Scarlet Lily" with Katherine McDonald.

Hernando G. Villa has joined B. P. Schulberg's art forces with Preferred Pictures, Incorporated.

Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix will be seen together next in "The Sin Flood," a Goldwyn picture.

Joe Bonner is against supporting Baby Peggy. After playing with the Baby in a story of the London slums, "The Little Match Girl," Joe scooted across the continent in order to reach the casting office in time to support the baby star in "Peg of the Movies."

Jack Mintz has just finished with "Bull" Montana.

Lucien Hubbard, Viola Lawrence, and Wallace Clifton did the editing and titling for "Wasted Lives."

Gaston Glass, has been selected to play the title role in the B. P. Schulberg production, "The Hero."

Nola Luxford has been engaged to play opposite Douglas Craig in "The Man of Wrath," which is being made by the Pilot Productions at the Cosmoart studios under the co-direction of Philip Hubbard and Lee Shumway. Miss Luxford was previously supporting Lawson Butt in "The Flying Dutchman," soon to be released.

Mickey McBan has finished two pictures at the Cosmoart studios, and is preparing to start on the third. Last week he did some swimming stuff for Emile Chautard. He was also going to give an exhibition at Bimini Friday night.

Malcolm McGregor is to enact the leading male role in "All the Brothers Were Valiant," which Irvin V. Willat is to direct for Metro.

John Ellis has joined the Metro photographic department and will take special still pictures for "Peg O' My Heart."

Lionel Belmore is to enact the role of Hawks in "Peg O' My Heart."

Leon Bary, former leading man to Mme. Sarah Bernhardt and more recently a highly successful exponent of the silent drama, will leave Hollywood next Tuesday for Honolulu with the Betty Compson company to film a story of the tropics as yet untitled.

Joseph Bell played the juvenile role in "The Sporting Thing To Do" during its second week's engagement at the Philharmonic Auditorium. He was given the part at a day's notice owing to the sudden illness of Roscoe Karnes.

Alfred Green is en route to George Ade's home at Boone, Ind., to discuss the forthcoming production of his new photodrama, "Back Home and Broke." Mr. Green is to direct this picture at the Long Island studio and Mr. Meighan will be the star. Lila Lee has already gone east to play the feminine lead in the new film which Mr. Ade wrote for Thomas Meighan.

Charles R. Seeling, with his troupe of players, has returned from a week's location work on Ria Vista island in the Sacramento river, where many interesting scenes were obtained for his latest picture, "The Purple Dawn." Besides being a producer, Mr. Seeling is author and director of his stories.

A full length, five-reel comedy-drama is being prepared for Phyllis Haver, it being the first in which she will be starred.

Maryon Aye has been secured as leading woman for "Bull" Montana in his second Hunt Stromberg production for Metro, "A Punctured Prince." This is Miss Aye's first appearance opposite the famous cauliflower eared film hero.

Russell Simpson is enacting the role of Peg's father in the Metro production of "Peg O' My Heart," in which Laurette Taylor is starring.

Vera Lewis is appearing in the Metro screen version of J. Hartley Manners' play, "Peg O' My Heart," which King Vidor is directing.

John Bowers and Allan Forrest have both been signed for leading parts in "Miss Emmy Lou."

The Mission Film corporation announces the completion of their first feature production of a series of stories. Their first effort is "Wasted Lives."

Fred Kohler, who has a partiality for "brute heavy" parts, finds his opportunity in the recently completed William Farnum production.

Clarence Geldert directed the production of "Wasted Lives" made by the Mission Film corporation.

Ernest Torrence is working under the direction of Penrhyn Stanlaws in "Singed Wings," in which Bebe Daniels and Conrad Nagel hold the leads.

Henry McCarty, after directing scenes for Charles Mack's series of westerns starring Lester Cuneo, is preparing the next story for his company. The last eight pictures made by Doubleday Productions were written and directed by McCarty.

Malcolm McGregor, who has been cast in the leading male role of the Metro screen version of Ben Ames Williams' sea story, "All the Brothers Were Valiant," which Irvin Willat will direct, has been elected a member of the Ambassador Swimming Club.

G. B. Lancaster wrote "The Altar Stairs."

PALMER COMES TO HOLLYWOOD

The Palmer Photoplay corporation has moved to its own building in Hollywood. It is a modern, five-story structure with brick exterior, especially arranged for the special demands of the corporation. In addition to scenario instruction, the company announces picture production as a part of its activities.

The first unit of a new administration building at the Charles Ray studio is under construction by Vance Construction company. It is of Spanish architecture, 100 feet on Commonwealth street and 200 feet on Sunset drive. It will cost about $30,000.

STUDIO TO OFFER SETS

The Fine Arts studios sets of various descriptions now standing on the "lot" have been placed at the disposal of outside producers. Among the sets listed are Spanish cafe and Spanish home interiors, drawing room, log cabin interiors, Chinese underworld sets and many others, which will be offered at exceedingly low prices.

"Remembrance" is to have its American premier at the California theatre in Los Angeles Sept. 24. Fred Miller, manager of the big playhouse, received permission directly from the New York offices of the Goldwyn corporation to present the Rupert Hughes special in this city, the home of the cinema industry.

Sol Cohen, violinist of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, is preparing an orchestration for Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone," a picture version of the novel, which will be released shortly. Cohen also wrote the orchestration for Thomas H. Ince's "Skin Deep."

Perfect Pictures announce that on September 27 they will hold their world's preview of the feature production, "The Power of Love," with their stereoscopic method of exhibition, at the Ambassador Hotel theater, Los Angeles.

Prosperity among the established motion picture studios is indicated by the decision during the past week of Charles Ray Productions, Inc., to erect a new administration building on its property in Hollywood. The structure will be of ornate Spanish type.

The Actors' Equity Association will present an entertainment at the Hollywood Women's Club on September 21. The benefit will be called "Preview," and will include many motion picture stars and directors.

The Motion Picture Directors' Association will present Shakespeare's comedy, "Midsummer Night's Dream," at the Hollywood Bowl, October 7, for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America.

Harvey Clark will play the Chinese heavy in the Charles Seeling production, "The Purple Dawn," instead of Eddie Piel. Piel is working in Tom Mix's picture, which was delayed when the star sprained his arm.

Portland, Oregon, is making determined efforts to establish itself as a motion picture production center which will outstrip Hollywood in importance, reports from the northwestern city indicate.

E. Mason Hopper, director of "Hungry Hearts," has invented an electric light which can be attached to the finger. The director uses it in taking notes in dark projection rooms.

Philippe de Lacey has been playing in the first feature production of a series at the Mission Film corporation.

CHURCH ENTERS PRODUCTION

Protestant churches of the United States will produce and distribute motion pictures, according to an announcement made by the Christian Herald, which says it has taken over the entire religious field. It will release in association with the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc.

A staff of workers are already at the World studio, Fort Lee.

The organization is known as the Christian Herald Motion Picture bureau. It will "provide clean films for clean people." A 53-reel Italian production made in Palestine and Egypt five years ago will be its first release.

Ten thousand churches, of 150,000 to 200,000 in this country, are equipped with projection machines, the Christian Herald states.

HOBART BOSWORTH TO RETURN TO STAGE

Following the completion of his characterization of Shane Keogh in Marshall Neilan's "The Strangers' Banquet," Hobart Bosworth will take a few weeks vacation before he resumes the production of his own pictures in San Francisco, by re-appearing on the stage.

Our Travelogue

GOING

To New York.—Richard Walton Tully was one of the many First National celebrities to leave Hollywood for New York last week with a copy of "Omar, the Tentmaker."

Mrs. Tully went with him and will accompany him on his European tour.

Irving Cummings will take his entire organization to Chicago in filming some of the big scenes for "Chicago Sal," the first of a series of three productions which he is filming for the Principal Pictures Corporation.

Among those making the trip will be Milton Sills, Alice Lake, Ralph Lewis, Gertrude Claire, Ben Hewlitt, aside from a large number from the technical staff at the Hollywood Studios, Inc., where "Chicago Sal" is being staged.

Rex Ingram and his company are in Miami, filming exterior scenes for "The Passion Vine." Among those who departed from Hollywood last week for Miami were Ramon Navarro, who is to have the leading male role; John Seitz, cameraman; Grant Whytock, film editor, and John George, who is to play a part.

NOTED AUTHOR COMING

Johnston McCulley, fictionist, is planning to visit Los Angeles this winter to write a new film play. Last year McCulley came here to evolve a sequel to his "Mark of Zorro" for Doug Fairbanks. At the R-C studios work is progressing on McCulley's newest screen story, "Captain Fly-by-Night."

COMING

From Europe.—Mabel Normand is expected back on the Sennett lot early in October in time to witness the local premiere of her latest First National picture, "Suzanna," a romantic-comedy-drama. F. Richard Jones directed it under Mr. Sennett's supervision.

Lee Moran and his company have just returned from a two-day trek into the hills back of Los Angeles, where the exterior films for Lee's present picture, "Camping Out," were taken. Al Herman is directing this two-reeler.

The Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society has adopted a standard color scheme for the electric connections in the studios; red for positive; white for neutral; and blue for negative. This will eliminate much of the confusion heretofore present when engineers were transferred from one studio to another.

Mario Carillo, whose real name is Count Mario Caracciolo, the only member of the Italian Royalty to enter the realm of motion pictures, will play opposite Ethel Clayton in her new vehicle, "The Remittance Woman," taken from the book by the same name that was written by Achmed Abdullah. The Count's father, the Duke of Melito, and his cousin, Prince D' Casagnesa, are members of the Italian diplomatic service, and are descendants of the oldest family of Naples. The Prince is at present ambassador from Italy to Hungary.

Ray H. Leek, publicity director of Preferred Pictures corporation, and Maymie Thayre, of the Metro news bureau, were married in San Francisco in August. They are living at 3020 North Vermont avenue.

Andree Peyre, before she became an actress, was driven out of Paris by a police order which forbade this native daughter of tender years to continue stunt flying—after she had become known as "France's ace aviatrix." Then followed six features made in France and Pathe's "The Riddle of the Range" made in Hollywood.

Mr. and Mrs. Neal Jack are the proud parents of a seven and one-half pound daughter, which arrived last Wednesday at the Clara Barton hospital. Mrs. Jack and daughter are reported to be doing nicely. The child has been christened Lois Mae and is Mr. and Mrs. Jack's second daughter. Mr. Jack is chief electrician for one of the local studios.

Walt Whitman has finished an engagement with the Mission Film corporation where he played a part in "Wasted Lives."

Lillian Leighton has been playing a part in the Mission Film production of "Wasted Lives."

Owen Moore, Selznick star, has returned from Del Monte, with a cup which he won in the recent championship golf tournament.

Margaret Loomis has a part in the production of "Wasted Lives," directed by Clarence Geldert.

John Arnold, who is photographing Viola Dana's new Metro picture, "Miss Emmy Lou," holds a record for continuous service with one company and one star. Arnold has done the camera work on every picture in which Miss Dana has appeared. He has cranked the camera on forty-seven productions and has never been absent from work a single day.

Crete Sipple has returned from a ten-day location trip to Big Bear with the Viola Dana-Metro company filming "Emmy Lou." She is doubling for Miss Dana, and reports a series of bee-stings, mule-rides, etc., to get the realistic effects.

Mildred Davis was guest at a farewell dinner given her by members of the Girls' Club at the Elite recently, in observance of her departure from the Hal E. Roach organization as leading woman to Harold Lloyd.

What Folks Think

WHERE ARE HER STORIES?

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 13.—Editor Camera!—I am wondering am I unlucky or are many of my fellow freelance screen playwrights meeting with the same experience in trying to market myself. My experiences during the past 3 years would fill a book. I will here mention only a few and confine myself to the present:

1. Comedy mailed to Carter DeHaven May 2; play not returned; no response to letters with stamps enclosed.

2. Comedy drama mailed to Chester Bennett March 28; play still out; no word, not even postal.

3. Comedy drama mailed to Ward Lascelle June 7; no word received; play not returned.

4. Comedy drama mailed to Stater-Stark productions July 7; no word received; play still out.

5. Drama to Quality productions, Fine Arts Studio, mailed July 30, company now seems to be out of business, but play not returned.

A well-known director has had two of my plays since March, but have received no word as to why they are being held. In all I have 14 plays which have been out longer than 60 days.

In spite of the many stupid, even horrible plays which have been produced, I still feel that there are many splendid men and women among the producers. But I do feel that our present system of marketing screen play material is all wrong. I know that even the worth while producers have fallen into the error of looking with scorn upon all outside screen stories. A la Sam Wood, former real estate man, who it is claimed considers all scenario writers morons—because some of the untrained writers, misled by the studios into thinking that producers are practically searching for material, have Merton-like dashed to the rescue.

This is funny, perhaps, but not good business for the movies. Why not be honest with the public—say to them frankly:

"Thank you, good people, but we can not use your efforts," etc., and I predict within 90 days the amateur inflow would be reduced to a minimum and the respect of thousands of people be won.

I wonder who can invent a new and businesslike way of presenting the right play to the right producer at the right time. It would save so much postage, time and worry for the author, and the studios would not be cluttered up with unsought material.

—Winona Boutree

ALASKAN WANTS IN

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 14.—Editor Camera!—I am a well-known Alaskan who drifted down here to see how our "canned plays" were made. Since I landed I have met senators, governors and a president or two, but whenever I sought to talk to someone relative to seeing a movie made I ran up against a wall as cold and hard as our northern glaciers. It does seem as if some courtesy in the matter might be shown but it is quite possible I have failed to find the key.

Some bright and intelligent Californian passed me his solution, i. e., "get on as an extra." Ha! ha! Tried every device in this line but could never find anyone that did the hiring. Oh! I ran up against fake studio chances—yes

Well, it seems as if I am to return north and tell the old soundboughts that the movie people guard their secrets well.

Possibly you can at least furnish me with the solution of how to get in on the "atmosphere."

Much Too Many

THERE are ten million good screen vehicles ready at hand, and more in the making daily.

At least R. R. Rockett says so, and he is the president of a producing company.

He does not refer to the scenarios which ride the trains from Maine to California, and from the igloo to the thatched roof.

He means the crusades, such stories as the Medes and Persians, the Assyrians, the Egyptians, the age of Pericles, the Greek immortals, Confucius, Lao Tze, Zarathustra, Pythagoras, of Charlemagne, Savonarola, Hypatia, Caesar, Venice, the Renaissance—the list is a long one and contains many more names which are not on the guild.

This settles it with a couple of exceptions.

Are directors going to stand for Pericles, Alexander the Great, the Aryan sages and the rest of that bunch?

And are the Aryans, the Alexanders and the past ages going to stand for the directors?

"From a Story by _____"

"JEST a minute now," said "Crankshaft" Joe, who had slipped into the sanctum noiselessly; "jest a minute, an' don't keep your hand on that paper weight. It makes me nervous."

"I have come to agree with youalls on this author-or-director thing," he continued, cranking about 22 and keeping on his toes for a leap to safety. "I've got it all figured out. I jest got done readin' as how directin' pitchers oughta be a art. Darn few directors is spellin' their name that way jest now, but when they do, they win the solid glass golf ball."

"But take this feller Shakespeare, f'rinstance; take him, I say, and his play, 'The Midsummer Nightdress,' f'rinstance. Huh? 'Night Dream?' Well, let it go at that."

"Now, I maintains that any gink that puts that one on, jest f'rinstance; anyone that puts that on, and then says on the screen: 'The Midsummer Nightgown,' written and directed by Hi Grader, from a story by Shakespeare, is presumin' jest a trifle, get me; jest a trifle."

And "Crankshaft" Joe vanished as silently as he came.

All Dressed Up

Once upon a time there was a very good, original screen story that went the rounds and then settled down at home. Also, there was Pat, who often declared that he did not believe in heaven or hell. When he died, his friend Mike went to the funeral and thus addressed the decedent:

"Poor Pat; all dressed up, an' no place to go!"

But, you see, the average scenario writer knows that there is, at least, a hell on earth.

HUNT YOUR OWN

There are a Hundred and One market hints for writers, in the studio pulse published weekly by "Camera!" Read the pulse. Note the stars and style of stories. Figure upon the likes of the directors mentioned. It is all there.

All Settled Now

Have you written your Turkish war story yet? -----

Love of country is a pretty good foundation for any writer.

The Palmer Photoplay corporation is the first organization to openly announce royalty for authors. They will produce only student work at first, however.

George Foster Platt has an opening for authors who have too many on hand. He wants one-act plays for the new theater of the Writers' Club. Send him the fifth reel of that feature; I said "send."

Once a manufacturer put on a good novel the way it appeared in the book. It did not fall down or break the producer. It cleaned up. Some day several other people are going to try the same thing.

Since that time a number of promoters have put on books and plays which were very adaptable so far as the space between the front of the first cover and the back of the first cover was concerned. But sometimes the directors spoiled the cover, and it was all off until next time.

A Timely Splash

SATISFACTORY water pictures are difficult to find, according to producers at the present time. A number of concerns have sought this character of scenario during the entire summer, and there is no doubt that salt spray, the river's gurgle and coral reefs will continue to attract certain editors for the next three months.

To those unfortunates who live elsewhere, we will state that California's summer really occurs in the fall and winter. Christmas generally sees the old family dog lying under a tree, with his tongue protruding like a hall rug.

Therefore, as the industry makes most of its pictures upon this smiling coast, and old Sol does his durndest in brown October without the ale, November and December, fly to it and do the South Sea island stuff; pull the raging main, and let the villain do his worst upon the Mississippi.

But, by the great horn spoon, you must have a story that is not as watery as your background.

That Woofle Bird

IF we had known what a pest our "woofle bird" was going to prove to so many faithfuls, we would have kept the dern thing in its cage.

But it is too late now. The pesky fellow has puzzled some, has drawn brickbats from others and cries of pain from quite a number who were injured in the fray.

A carom shot seems to have entered the municipality of Egeland, a place entirely strange to us, although we once thought we knew all about North Dakota. Some of our ancestors dodged Indians and the Younger brothers there.

However, Ward Skeen, who has been writing skeenarios, as Deacon Blue would say, has only just recovered. At least he has just written us about it. He says:

"I was very much interested in one of your articles, some time ago, when you wrote about the Woofle Bird. I believe I know what you mean."

"When I first read the article, I searched my arithmetic, but could not figure out your meaning. However, the postman came along and left me about a dozen bad pennies (scenarios). I call them bad pennies, because they always return. And now I know what you mean."

"But you should have written 'Woeful Bird.' That seems to be the proper term to use in case of free lance writers. Of course it means more business for the postoffice department, and much more work for my postman, but everyone has to start at the bottom and work up, therefore I have hopes of getting there in the years to come."

"If Mr. A. B. Penpusher, F.R.S.H.A.S., sends in a punque story, or writes a seedy yarn that is pretty well frayed out, he gets about leventeen thousand iron men for the same. But, if a free lancer shoots in a story, the ten-dollar-a-week clerk licks a stamp, and puts a "dejection" slip in the envelope, reading: "We thank you for the privilege of reading your manuscript, but it is not available, etc., etc."

"But they say 'the story is the thing.' Well, maybe it is. We hope so."

"By the way, don't poke so much fun at the budding scenario writers by saying that everyone is doing it. I have a neighbor who is not. Of course I don't know what he might do in the future. He might take a correspondence course and win $10,000."

Well, there are several wild woofs in that one. But we expect that they would change to whoops of joy should the scenario writer from Egeland receive a studio check. It makes a lot of difference, you know.

Brother Skeen presumably has not tried a number of special professions, or he, like other "woofle" writers, would discover that disappointments represent the price that beginners must pay before astonishing the receiving clerk at the bank.

"But, in the case of scenario writing, see all the fun they have."

FLORIDA NEWS

MIAMI, September 3.—Things are picking up. The latest arrivals are Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Connelly, Mr. and Mrs. Rex Ingram, Col. Ford and his family, John Russell, Willis Goldbeck, John Seitz, Ramon Navarro and the rest of the company, 26 in all.

I had the luck to sit in at a showing of "Trifling Women," Ingram's latest. Ramon Navarro goes over big.

Jack O'Key is cutting his first picture for John Brunton. It features Margaret Courtot in a rum-running story called "The Filigreed Flask," written by Ernest Lebel.

—NORMAN H. DAVIS.

The Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society held a banquet at Hotel Clark last Thursday night, honoring the admission of Leo Green, electrical engineer of Lasky studio, to the society. There were about 20 members present. G. E. MacCormac, president, acted as toastmaster.

Contemporary Criticisms

"THE LIGHT IN THE DARK" (First National)

"The story has been lavishly produced in every respect, with plenty of heart interest and some of the finest performances ever contributed to the silver sheet. . . . The ancient and picturesque scenes depicting the history of the Holy Grail, and the equally beautiful touches given the Tennyson story, are examples of what natural colors can accomplish when properly handled."

"Miss Hampton has been seen to good advantage in her previous vehicles but in 'The Light in the Dark,' her portrayal of the leading character is without doubt the best piece of acting she has ever done and equal to the best screen actresses of the day. She demonstrates that she has brains and beauty and uses both to the best advantage. An excellent cast surrounds her, including E. K. Lincoln, Lon Chaney, Theresa Maxwell Conover, Charles Mussett, Dore Davison, Dorothy Walters, Edgar Norton and Walter McEwen."

—Exhibitors Herald

"'The Light in the Dark,' otherwise Faith, is by odds, the best story, and certainly is better handled by Hope Hampton than anything she has ever done. . . . There is a brand new twist—the introduction of the Holy Grail. . . . Incidentally the introduction of this feature allows the use of about a reel of colored photography, showing Tennyson's famous interpretation of the Holy Grail, and this is, by odds the finest color work ever shown in this country. . . . Too much praise cannot be given this. The reel is a charming addition to the picture, and makes it unusually worth while."

"Some one should keep the strong lights off Miss Hampton. Lon Chaney, excellent actor that he is, does splendid work as an Italian who, in a simple way, loves the heroine. His work is very good."

"The color work insistently demands attention. . . . the colors are soft, without fringe, and unusually attractive."

—Film Daily

"'The Light in the Dark' strikes an appeal that goes deeper than the average. It has a penetrating theme and symbolic beauty that has been emphasized just enough to keep the picture within easy understanding of all, at the same time lending that something to the scenes that warrants calling it entertainment plus."

"More pleasing because they are introduced at the psychological moment the colors avoid any effect of being cheaply spectacular and seem to have an actual purpose in visualizing the story."

"The picture has been well directed and realizes the art of trifling with sensationalism without being in any sense cheap, and has already given substantial indication that it will meet with success."

—Moving Picture World

"The public is introduced to the new Eastman process of colored photography. . . . this color work is quite the finest of its kind ever seen on the screen. Several of the scenes have all the beauty of an old painting and they add distinctiveness to the film. Here is an innovation in picture making, one that means a decided step forward for the films."

"The producers have not been sparing in the production. Everything has been to bring out the high lights of the story, every set and location being well chosen, while the photography proves that an expert handled the camera."

"Miss Hampton has never before done such forcible dramatic work on the screen. . . . E. K. Lincoln is excellent as a Jewish pawn broker. . . . Other ers that should come for a word of praise are Teresa Maxwell Conover and Dorothy Walters."

—Morning Telegraph

"MOONSHINE VALLEY" (Fox)

"It's pure unadulterated melodrama, a red-blooded story that gives our old friend Bill Farnum opportunity to put over a portrayal of real dramatic power."

"The title is misleading. There is no moonshine in this one, whatever unless that is what they are drinking in one saloon set. The picture opens with action and keeps up a merry pace until the climax. There's some fine acting by Holmes Herbert and Sadie Mullen."

"One of the features of the picture is the work of Dawn O'Day, a three-year-old. . . . Then there's a dog that's almost human and has some important action to put over."

"The story is not an original one in theme, but it's well done in this instance and Herbert Brenon's fine direction is evident throughout."

—Motion Picture News

"There's a lot of action in Mary Murillo's story. . . . but for all that the plot seems draggy and trite. It is along the lines of the usual triangle melodrama, and although numerous points of appeal are scattered throughout the picture, it could hardly be classed as having anything above the average entertainment values."

"William Farnum does one of his typical roles as Ned Connors. His display of man power is as forceful as ever. Sadie Mullen possesses a pleasing personality and her emotional roles are done with splendid feeling. . . . Dawn O'Day. . . is a fine little actress and she is justly entitled to share honors with the star in this production."

—Exhibitors Trade Review

"'Moonshine Valley' is Farnum as he is best known and admired. He is afforded almost unlimited chances of acting, and the result is a performance of unusual strength."

"'Moonshine Valley' makes use of characters and situations that have proved beyond all doubt, their entertainment value. . . . There is something generally familiar about the material. But Herbert Brenon, the director has handled it so as to bring out the most effective situations and with fullest appreciation of the human interest motive."

"Dawn O'Day can be counted on to win every one in the audience. It is the old sentimental appeal of 'a little child shall lead them.'"

—Moving Picture World

"THE THREE MUST GET- THERES" (Allied)

"There are entirely too few satires and burlesque of popular pictures. The latest in this sparsely populated class is Max Linder's burlesque of Doug Fairbanks' production 'The Three Musketeers,' under the slightly revamped title."

"Max Linder does some neat work in his imitation of Fairbanks. In drawing the caricature the French comedian exceeds anything he has done in his unusually long career on the screen. His buffoonery has an idea behind it, which makes it doubly funny."

"Linder adapted the plot of the piece and supplied in the boiled down version of Dumas' tale a more connected story than is usual in farce pictures. This he directed himself and beside exerting his talents in arranging the comedy situations has mounted the production with quite a show of magnificence. Thomas N. Mirand has injected his share of the laughs in some cleverly written titles."

—Moving Picture World

"A clean, clever burlesque served up in thirty minutes of merry whirl-i-gig action; this attraction is an excellent vehicle for displaying the acrobatic and mirth-creating abilities of that lively French comedian, Max Linder. . . . The star also acted in a directorial capacity and did a splendid job, wisely refraining from stretching the material beyond a four-reel compass. . . . As the picture stands it keeps the audience on a broad grin from start to finish and speeds into a laughable climax before its comic absurdities outwear their welcome."

"Little Max Linder is a genuine artist in his own line, a vivid pantomimist and acrobat extraordinary. Catherine Rankin as the Queen and Jobyna Ralston as Connie are fully equal to the comedy demands of their respective parts, and well balanced support is accorded the principals by the remainder of the company."

—Exhibitors Trade Review

"Most of the characters, including Max Linder as Dart-m-Again, and Bull Montana as the Duke of Rich-Lou, are such good likenesses for those in the cast of the straight screen version of the Dumas drama that the laugh would be instantaneous even without the action and the capital continuity."

"The burlesque has been well staged and the cast is an ideal one."

—Morning Telegraph

"A merry piece of nonsense and horse play—sure to please. . . . The story is just what a good burlesque should be. . . . The direction is good, photography is excellent and the lightings are good. . . . The star is funnier than he has been in a long time. . . . Bull Montana is a scream as Richelieu; Frank Cooke is funny as the King. . . . Exteriors are good. . . . The detail is well handled—title very funny."

—Film Daily

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM" (Fox)

"A picture that is undoubtedly destined to rank with 'Over the Hill' in its virtually general appeal. . . . the pathos and the weep-compelling moments are relieved by the many laughable interpolations and some of the finest child acting ever seen on the screen."

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them' is a clean and wholesome picture free from morbid and sordid incidents; a real picture with both dramatic and melodramatic features whose unfolding is always logical and very effective."

"Mr. X, the Mysterious story writer, has planned a novel plot and, while it is somewhat hazy in spots and some of the principals have a tendency to overact, it has so many excellent features that the rough spots are lost sight of in the general goodness."

—Moving Picture World

"Never has a picture been able to boast of more talented child actors and actresses as are shown here. Even the two-year-olds act like David Warfield."

"There are only a few places where the action is slowed because of essentials. . . . Roger Lytton as the tyrannical Colonel Lewis is given the burden of acting and he acquits himself in the usual fine manner."

"The production has been mounted correctly, many of the exteriors being unusually attractive."

"There are a large number of tense moments during the action, all of which have been well handled by Director Dawley."

—Motion Picture News

"In sending forth its latest special production, 'A Little Child Shall Lead Them,' the Fox Film company doubtless depends to no small extent on the apparent vogue of the orphan film."

"The cast is a good one and includes Roger Lytton, Peggy Shaw, Florence Billings, Niles Welch, Ernest Hilliard, Adelaide Prince and two attractive children—Florence Haas and Jimmy Lapsley."

"The production was directed by J. Searle Dawley and has several very human and very unusual scenes."

"The story is interesting though rather complex."

—Exhibitors Herald

"The story is the least of this picture, for it is in the collection of delightful children that one finds the most enjoyment. Searle Dawley, who is responsible for the direction, must have the talent of a Froebel to get such natural results. . . . The cast is merely an adequate one, no one is starred and with good reason, there is not a striking performance in the whole picture."

"Peggy Shaw, who plays the girl, is passively interesting. Marie Reichardt as the old nurse seemed more natural than the others and we liked Niles Welch as the second husband, although he had a rather trying part. The children are all real and skillfully handled. They evidently didn't know there was a camera around."

—Morning Telegraph

"THE WOMAN HE LOVED" (American)

"Honors are about even in the work of Mr. Mong as author and actor in 'The Woman He Loved,' although there may be those who, in this instance, will prefer his histrionic to his literary effort. But whatever the piece may lack in other respects it is not wanting in locale."

"This film is what is known in the trade as 'a human interest story,' and it is a particular variety to which picture devotees seem to take most kindly. Marcia Manon gives an interesting performance as Esther Levinsky, the wife, and Bruce Guerin is very engaging as the child. Mr. Mong, of course, is the father, and while his performance is good, as indeed it always is, it is not by any means the type of part to which he is best suited."

—Morning Telegraph

"Mr. Mong covers too much ground. The trouble with this picture is its reliance upon the long arm of coincidence. Where it scores is in the detail and characterization."

"The scenes of the Ghetto are handled with a good eye for the atmosphere. And the human touch here is well established."

"The story serves a purpose. . . . even though it loses in logic and dramatic force as a result of the convenient episodes."

"The fore part of the story is much more genuine than the latter reels when Mong, thinking a punch is needed, supplies the melodrama."

—Motion Picture News

"William V. Mong. . . has somewhat spoiled his chance of an all round success by faulty construction in having the plot run the gamut of localities as well as emotions. Also he has knitted together his incidents with far too much coincidence. He is supported by a highly competent cast and Edward Sloman has staged the piece with fine atmosphere."

RELEASES FROM BROADWAY

By Raymond McKee

Rodolph Valentino "Blues," a fox trot novelty, is being released this week by Jack Mills, Incorporated. Permission for publication by the Paramount Film company was given despite the fact that many similar songs have been rejected.

Harold Lloyd is also being sung about. It's also a fox trot, and is called "Grandma's Boy." It's a decided hit in the east.

Arthur Housman, well known from the old "Edison days," is producing "Housman Productions," starring himself.

Will Rogers' latest, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," was given a private showing at the Plaza theater this week.

Elsie Ferguson returns to the screen this week via her stage play, "Outcast." She is working at the Paramount Long Island studio.

Robert Vignola has finished the million dollar picture, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," and is now in the midst of "Adam and Eve," which also stars Marion Davies. The interiors for these productions were designed by Joseph Urban.

F. J. Godsal, president of the Goldwyn lot, is on his way to Culver City on business.

Victor Herbert is writing the musical score for "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Dick Friel, once upon a time director of Paragon comedies, is writing the "gags" for the Raymond McKee comedies, produced at the Glendale studios, Glendale, L. I.

Jean Acker (Mrs. Valentino), is preparing a sketch for vaudeville. Lewis and Gordon will direct the tour.

"Love Is An Awful Thing," an Owen Moore comedy special, opened an engagement at the Criterion theater, New York, on Sunday, September 3rd.

George M. Cohan has just refused ten thousand dollars a week for ten consecutive weeks. Big picture theatre managers outside of New York City made him this offer because they are at their wits end to find an attraction that will draw.

Old friends of Frank Conroy and George LeMaire will be happy to know that the old team are reunited after a split of several years. They will open at the New Brighton theatre August 14th.

CAMERA! hereby declares war on fake schools of film acting.

Dozens of parasites in Los Angeles and Hollywood are fattening on the savings of ambitious young men and women — and middle-aged men and women — even on old persons.

These parasites lure victims with classified help wanted ads, with liners in the personal columns and the investment required columns of the daily papers.

They draw glowing pictures of the immensity of the motion picture industry, of the new companies starting there is only one handicap to the progress of this Great Industry. It seems there is a dearth of actors. Producers have a terrible time finding players enough to go around. Why, look at the new leading men and women springing up every week! Yesterday they, too, were inexperienced. But—a few instructions in making up—a little work under a director, and—look where they are now!

Then the wily agent signs up the seeker of fame and fortune for six lessons at $15, maybe $20. Make-up instruction may be extra. Maybe they must buy stock in the film company before they get the job.

On such fakers Camera! declares war.

Beware of them!

THIS editorial is not addressed to Camera!'s regular readers, who are professional men and women of motion pictures. It is intended for the ambitious, inexperienced persons, in Los Angeles, hoping to enter that profession.

Through classified want ads scattered through the daily and Sunday newspapers the fake schools draw their victims.

WANTED—New types for motion pictures. Experience unnecessary. Old-established studio. Small fee.

MOTION PICTURES — Wanted limited number well dressed inexperienced people, 7% fee, steady work if type.

WANTED—Well dressed women for movies, wonderful opportunity; experience unnecessary.

FOR MOTION PICTURE—Just planning casting; big production; have opening for 15 women and girls.

CHRISTIAN PEOPLE wanted to work in motion pictures.

These are samples of dozens of similar ads. Applicants are told of the "big demand" for new faces, of companies that obtain players from the school's pupils, of "scouts" from Hollywood studios that lurk about seeking new talent.

"Of course" knowledge of make-up is the first requisite.

The prospective picture star is given a card to a make-up store and told to purchase cold cream, No.

8 powder, a powder puff and a box of make-up liners; also to bring a mirror and two towels to the make-up class. Lessons are so much per.

Then the budding player is given a card to a "director," usually working at one of the older, discarded studios, and is given half a dozen lessons in acting for $15 or $20 more.

Sometimes make-up and acting are taught in one course. More often two sets of grafters prey on the inexperienced, screen-struck young woman or man.

THERE is nothing reprehensible in itself about giving lessons in make-up and acting.

But pupils are promised work in pictures—told of a big set going up next week at some studio, told of the feature the "director" himself will cast from his classes in acting, given optimistic pictures of the dire lack of actors in the studios.

No one who has any knowledge of motion picture conditions will make such statements.

No reputable school will make such claims.

Camera! will use every means in its power to drive such fake schools out of business.

Any persons having experience with schools that profess to teach make-up and screen acting are invited to relate them to Camera!, 4513 Sunset Boulevard.

Film Capital Production Notes

SEEKING PRODUCTION COMPLETE

Charles R. Seeling announces the completion of "The Purple Dawn," first of his new series. The picture is a combination sea, Chinese underworld and rural story, with many spectacular shots being filmed on Ria Vista island in the Sacramento river. Included in the cast is William Aldrich, who has worked in previous Seeling pictures. "The Purple Dawn" was written, directed and produced by Charles Seeling.

Hampton Del Ruth has completed his special feature, "The Marriage Chance," and will preview the picture as soon as the cutting and editing are completed. Henry Walthal, Milton Sills, Tully Marshall and other stars are in the cast. It is one of Mr. Del Ruth's original stories.

Pathe announces the acceptance of two two-reel comedy productions starring Will Rogers for release this fall. They are entitled respectively "The Ropin' Fool"—which was shown at the Capitol theater, New York, and "Fruits of Faith," the latter having yet to make its first public appeal.

The cast for "Her Price," the Edward Belasco production, has been completed and actual shooting has started at Universal. Belasco is considering many more original screen stories. It is his purpose to create an entirely new angle of story interpretation under FitzGerald's direction. Al Kelly has been appointed production manager, Stanley Orr business manager, and Jack Allen assistant.

Monty Banks, who has started work on his latest Federated comedy entitled "Flood and Sand," will probably follow this with a rollicking burlesque on "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." Monty plans to call his fun-film "Robbin' Good."

Mack Sennett has selected Roy Del Ruth to direct the next Ben Turpin comedy special. Del Ruth is at present preparing for this Turpin picture, which will be released by Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated.

AT UNIVERSAL

Several productions have been started at Universal City which will offer screen fans entertainment compounded of superior elements.

Filming of von Stroheim's "Merry Go Round," proceeds consistently with some of the finest artists of the screen giving their best efforts to the creation.

Three series of two-reel productions based on condensed dramatic stories are under way: "Tales of the Fish Patrol," Jack London's famous sea stories starring Jack Mulhall; timberland tales starring Roy Stewart, and "The Leather Pushers," H. G. Witwer's short reel fights starring Reginald Denny.

Comedies starring Lewis Sargent and Neely Edwards are being filmed to satisfy in two ways the humor appetites of the public.

"A Hero," by Albert Payson Terhune, has been purchased by Louis B. Mayer for production by Fred Niblo. It will be the third in the series of Niblo Productions which will be presented by Mr. Mayer through Metro, following "The Famous Mrs. Fair" and "Captain Applejack."

Captain T. W. Moore, who is featured in his own story "Human Salvage," produced by the Merry Fay Productions Incorporated, San Francisco.

COMPOSERS IN FILM

Many companies have been organized for odd purposes in picture production, but an entirely worthy one is the formation of "Zinkin Productions," of New York, which will put forth a series of two-reel plays based upon the biographical romance of the world's greatest musical composers. Mr. Arthur Zinkin has left literary and educational work to produce.

Chet Withey, who recently returned from the coast where he directed Katherine MacDonald in "Heroes and Husbands" and a number of other photoplays of note, is now at work on Elsie Ferguson's new Paramount picture "Outcast," which is being filmed at the Long Island studio, New York.

This picture will mark Miss Ferguson's return to the screen, as she has not been seen in pictures since "Peter Ibbetson," which was produced more than a year ago.

Casting is expected to commence shortly for a new picture to be produced by Nat Deverich for the Fine Arts studios. The initial scenes for the picture will be filmed in the Pacific ocean near San Diego.

Burton King started a new one at the Ideal studios this week with a cast composed of Barard Seegle, Leslie King, Anders Randolph and Edmund Breese. A Jewish story.

Starting

Lambert Hillyer has begun filming a story of American home life, "Miles Brewster and the Super-Sex," by Frank R. Adams, the well-known magazine writer.

Tully Marshall, Lydia Knott, Gertrude Claire, Charlotte Pierce, Stanhope Wheatcroft and Kenneth Gibson complete the cast. John Stumar is the cinematographer.

S. M. Herzig is directing Paul Weigel and Dot Farley, in a series of Cruellywed comedies at Universal City. In the cast are such well-known players as Snitz Edwards, Francis Carpenter, Dolly Rich, and others. Brutalier is the cameraman while Billy Leonard is handling props. H. D. Newcomb is business manager and is financing the company.

Finis Fox expects to start work on a new story within a few days. The title of the story and his cast have not yet been announced. The picture will be made at the Fine Arts studios.

Jess Robbins starts work at the Fine Arts studios next week on a new dramatic story. Edward Horton, former matinee idol, is his star.

Rex Ingram has started work in Miami on a sea story. He got most of his cast in New York. Leslie King, remembered for his fine work in "Orphans of the Storm," is with him.

J. Chas. Hayden is getting ready to shoot a series of two-reel dramas. Chas. Gyblin is ready now to start work on another Allied Artist feature at the Tilford studios.

Roy Neil has started a picture "The House of Solomon," at the Tilford studios for American release.

Thos. Dixon has started "The Beast," with Bill Thompson directing, at the Tilford studios.

George Terwilliger starts another feature this week for American Release under the Pyramid banner. Casting now.

Jack Pickford is finishing "Garrison's Finish," in New York. He is slated to make a new one here.

Thos. Hefferon is starting a company of his own here to work in Miami, Fla.

Tefft Johnson starts a feature at the World studios this week.

G. M. Anderson's latest two-reel comedy starring Stan Laurel is burlesque on "Blood and Sand," a recent Paramount success. The story has the title "Mud and Sand," and is being directed by Gil Pratt at the Fine Arts studios. Anderson has obtained a Metro release.

Current Reviews

"The Eternal Flame"

THE changing world always has been a subject of feverish study on the part of publisher and producer.

"What does the public want?" has been the query upon the tongues of men since humankind has sought to apprehend desire, in order to appease appetite either physical or mental.

And, during the existence of motion-picture production, no one has sought more earnestly to find the answer than the manufacturers of screen features.

These easily discovered what the public did not want. That was a simple task. Among other things it was found that seekers of film entertainment did not want period plays; costume productions. And that was not so long ago.

But now, with much suddenness, picture patrons have gone "costume mad," if that expresses it. Perhaps it would do greater justice to the genius of screen writer and director to say that the twain have "made the public like it."

At any rate the old country and the new are putting over production after production wherein past periods with their people, customs and costumes score heavily.

"The Eternal Flame," from the studios of Joseph M. Schenck, is far from the least of these. Indeed, it seemed to be a question during a discussion in a group of highly intelligent persons recently, whether this Norma Talmadge special did not rank with the highest efforts of this character in recent times.

Certainly it is gratifying to herald now the appearance of this splendid screen entertainment, and to announce its remarkable success, in these days of anxiety among picture folk who are battling for normalcy in the industry.

"The Eternal Flame" not only is wholly satisfying with its colorful unfoldment, but it has been handled with such superb intelligence by Director Frank Lloyd that it stands out brilliantly in a field where great productions are not unknown.

The screen adaptation of Balzac's famous "La Duchesse de Langeais" in itself deserves special mention, for it proves entertainment of highest value. That alone insures the success of any film production.

Director Lloyd's people are not manikins, stiffly moving about in stiffly starched gowns and clothes. Each one moves with graceful ease, as humans of past, present and future did and always will move.

Without question Miss Talmadge leads the way in this most acceptable offering, with a command which is not challenged by any previous screen appearance of that very popular star. And she has glowed very brilliantly at certain times in the past.

A difficult role for anyone, however talented, Miss Talmadge registers as surely and certainly as in those days when she was supposed to be at her best.

Conway Tearle never was better in his role, and that is high praise.

Rosemary Theby, as the rival duchess, deserves one of the several special mentions in which Otto Lederer, Irving Cunningham and Kate Lester must share, although the first two were seen but little.

Adolphe Jean Menjou as the Duke, much helped the uplift of the action.

Otis Harlan, Thomas Ricketts and Wedgwood Nowell were others who registered heavily in a production which made big demands upon histrionic ability.

Cameraman Tony Gaudio was supreme in filming the big special.

"Remembrance"

TO truthfully present some specific, if temporary, manifestation of human life, in the unfoldment of a telling bit of man's existence, is entirely worthy of writer or photoplay moulder. So long as this is done in entirely satisfactory manner, the public always will approve.

It has become rather a maxim among those of Filmland, that one must not approach real life too closely in the realm of fancy which attends the mute folk who move and have their being in shadowland.

However, it appears that the exception to the rule is about to become the rule itself, for a number of examples of this character have manifested themselves recently upon the screen, with success which has opened the eyes of many producers.

One of the foremost disciples of the humble story, who leaves all question of so-called art to others, is Rupert Hughes, the novelist, recently turned to the task of writing and directing motion pictures.

"Remembrance" is the second of his productions, and both have proven homey exemplifications of human nature as have all his screen stories.

We owe this author-director so much for the beautiful things he has given us all, that it is with reluctance that we carry out the duty of indicating faults in "Remembrance," which ordinary analysis easily presents.

Admitting that the subject is one filled with great interest, an appealing interest which immediately draws the audience's warmest sympathy, it must be confessed that, from a production standpoint, "Remembrance" does not class with either "The Old Nest" or "Come On Over," both of them from Hughes' scenarios.

Perhaps if a recent production based upon the same subject—the long-suffering martyr, old dad—had not arrived first with its ripeness and richness as developed by a long experienced director, one might not feel so much of the thinness in spots, the lack of logic at intervals, and so much "tame" footage which neither advances the plot nor sustains high interest, all of which now are apparent in the present production.

Again there are fade-outs which are cut too closely, the same scene jumping in again after a presumable passage of time, but all this sudden transition is without a subtitle to explain to the audience or to save such breaks from crudeness.

Dad's illness was very sudden; he hid the documents in the sofa pillow, a big, stiff bundle of them which would be discovered by the first person to touch or handle the pillow. Then he managed to climb several flights of stairs afterwards, rather overdoing the attack of illness. And the sickbed scenes did not reach out and grasp the spectator with the strength they should have manifested, nor were they as convincing as they surely would have been in a Rupert Hughes novel.

There are certain underlying principles of motion-picture production which must always be observed in production, but these elements are given to the director through experience. And "Remembrance" is only the second picture put over by this author.

Claude Gillingwater is good as the old father, a type which would be difficult to improve upon. Outside of the over-acting mentioned, Mr. Gillingwater is immense.

Patsy Ruth Miller is the one daughter who does not "work" father. Everyone likes Patsy.

Cullen Landis, the necessary lover for Patsy, does not add to acting values heavily.

Kate Lester, as Dad's wife who has grown rather snobbish with wealth, but who recalls the past and love, through the mutterings of her delirium-stricken husband, is not so convincing as one earnestly wishes her to be.

The remainder of the cast include: Nell Craig, Dana Todd, Richard Tucker, Esther Ralston, Arthur Trimble, Lucille Rickson, Max Davidson, William Carroll and Helen Haywood. All were as satisfactory as one could wish in the work they were called upon to do.

"My Friend the Devil"

WE have done penance enough to last a lifetime of sin in viewing "My Friend the Devil," a Fox picture. The first ten reels are the worst but long before that one may become cured of chronic insomnia. This agony is divided into three periods and as they progress the action, logic and direction become more absurd until it becomes a ludicrous failure.

The idea buried in this alleged feature is an elevating and well-meaning one. This fact makes us resent more than ever, the treatment that made it look ridiculous. The theme is that of an atheist who eventually learns that no thing on earth can save his loved one and turns to the Divine Power.

The director, Harry Millarde, made a brave attempt in the beginning but he tired of his subject or it became too difficult to prevent the subject from becoming ridiculous. His characters run wild in action.

Paul H. Sloane scenarized George Ohnet's novel "Doctor Rameau." In doing so he eliminated any fineness or restraint and preserved the melodrama and erratic atmosphere, resulting in a scrambled chaotic mass of moving neither forward nor backward.

Joseph Ruttenberg has accomplished a bit of art in many of his long shots and his photography of Miss Castleton is beautiful.

Bunny Grauer, the boy character of John Dryden, is a real trooper and sets a standard of acting that Charles Richman as the grown-up John Dryden fails to live up to. Richman overacts and in a supposedly great dramatic climax causes a murmur of laughter by distorting his role.

Barbara Castleton matches her beauty with remarkable dramatic work far above the quality of other material used here.

Wm. H. Tooker as Doctor Brewster is poised at times but at others has flares of exaggeration.

Peggy Shaw's impression of an ingenue is pitiful and if her attempts at acting were not so sad they would provoke a chuckle.

The also-rans are: Myrtle Stewart, Adolph Miller, John Tavernier, Anna May, Robert Frazier, Mabel Wright, John Randall and Robert Marks.

Where to Find People You Know

Helen Howell, recently of the Alt & Howell comedy company of Hollywood, is playing a leading part in the current Plum Center comedy. Miss Howell is supporting Dan Mason, star of the comedies.

George Marion, Jr., son of the actor, has been added to the Goldwyn scenario staff as an authority on foreign literature. Mr. Marion was educated abroad and is conversant with the modern literature of France, Germany, England, Spain and Italy.

Mae Murray, who arrived with her company from New York last week, has started work on her latest production, "Coronation," at the Goldwyn studio, Culver City.

June Elvidge and David Torrence, New York character stars, have been added to the cast of "Forsaking All Others," being filmed at Universal City.

George Archainbaud has been engaged to direct an all-star special production at Universal. His story will be "The Power of a Lie," a magazine story by Johann Bojer.

Claire Adams has been signed by Universal to play the feminine lead opposite Herbert Rawlinson in "The Kidnappers," the picture which has just been started at Universal City under Stuart Paton's direction.

Barbara LaMarr and Gaston Glass have been selected to head the big cast being organized to screen "The Hero," formerly a stage production. Gasnier has been named to direct the picture for Preferred.

Nat Ross is preparing to start work on "The Ghost Patrol," the subtly humorous story by Sinclair Lewis, which Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and Raymond L. Schrock scenarized. George Nichols and Ralph Graves have been engaged.

Robert F. Hill, director of two of Universal's best serials, "Robinson Crusoe" and "The Radio King," is preparing to direct a noteworthy cast in a new chapter play titled, "Wolves of Society."

Max Asher has been engaged by the Century Comedy outfit to appear in support of Baby Peggy, in Peg's current laugh-getter, "Peg of the Movies."

Henry Sharp, who had charge of the photography of Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone," has returned to the Thomas H. Ince studios after being "loaned" for a month's work on a Robertson-Cole production.

Dot Farley and Paul Weigel are to be co-starred in a series of two-reel comedies concerning the laughable domestic difficulties of "Henry and Caroline Cruelwed." The first picture of this series is being made at Universal City under the direction of Sigfried Herzog.

Ruth Sebastian, actress and dancer, has signed with the Belasco productions for a part in their forthcoming special, "Her Price."

Joe Allen has turned his attentions to working in Bible stories out at Burbank, where he was cast to play "Jacob."

Margaret Cullington is working at Universal, in comedies.

Fred Kohler loves to do brute heavies, and he just got a chance to show off his acting ability, size and strength in a William Farnum production.

Margaret Livingston played opposite Reginald Denny in his last story of the "Leather Pusher" series. Upon the completion of this picture she is to play in a story that James W. Horne is scheduled to direct at the Ince studios.

Lloyd Campbell, Sennett film cutter, has transferred his shears to the Cosmosart lot where he is now cutting for Pilot Productions.

Thelma Worth, cousin of Betty Compson, will appear opposite Lester Cuneo, who is starring in the Doubleday series.

Harry Marks and his animals worked in a Scott Darling comedy with Louis Sargent as the star.

Charles P. McHugh (Little Lord Fauntleroy), has an important role in "The Beautiful and Damned," at Warner Brothers. Charley is a type all by himself, and has been busy lately, putting over some mighty good stuff.

Eleanor Lynn is still with the Hamilton-White forces playing the ingenue roles.

Sid Smith is now making his thirty-seventh Hallroom Boy comedy.

Sam Mogi, assistant cameraman with the Richard Walton Tully organization, is to direct two-reel comedies with Max Mogi and tiny Bebe Ellen as his stars. Sam and Ben Mogi also will co-operate. "Memphis Blues," is the first release.

Dorothea Wolbert has just completed an engagement in support of Harold Lloyd at the Roach studios.

Clayton Jones is playing the part of a "he-flapper" in Viola Dana's latest Metro production "Miss Emmy Lou."

Robert Gray is doing a heavy with Jack Mulhall at Universal.

Robt. McKenzie has been playing "heavy" with the Fairbank company.

Charlotte Stevens is playing opposite Bobby Vernon in a two-reel comedy at Christies, with Harold Beaudine directing.

Al Herman used John Brown, the bear, recently, in a scene at Griffith Park.

Francis Adair, Irish actor, is in Hollywood, and is preparing to go into motion pictures. He has been on the legitimate stage for many years.

Kenneth J. Bishop is directing Bumps Adams in a burlesque on the Northwest Mounted Police.

Arthur Hillon is supporting Bumps Adams in his new comedy now under production.

Evelyn Selbie returned from location at Huntington Lake last week where she has been playing the part of an Indian squaw with the William Russell outfit. They are now finishing the picture at the Fox studio under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell.

Miriam Cooper has been cast in the forthcoming Belasco production at Universal City.

Forrest Stanley has been cast for a part in the new Belasco production, "Her Price."

Eddie Gribbon is cast in the "Captain Fly-By-Night" story, which W. K. Howard is directing for R-C, with Johnny Walker as the star.

Louise Fazenda is now playing a comedy "heavy" role in "The Beautiful and Damned," by J. Scott Fitzgerald at the Warner Brothers studios. She is playing opposite Harry Myers. Prior to this she appeared as "Mandy Skinner" in "Quincey Adams Sawyer," a Metro special, this following immediately upon a characterization on the old lines in "Bow Wow," a Mack Sennett two-reeler.

Alan Hale has finished his engagement with Shirley Mason at the William Fox studios.

Matt Moore is now playing the lead in Priscilla Dean's new picture, "Lady Raffles."

Pickups By The Staff

ACTORS EQUITY SCORES

Well, if they all are going to be as good as the "Preview," we are going to occupy a front seat at the rest of the Actors' Equity Association programs.

An overflow crowd witnessed the opener, and laughed or applauded until midnight, through a diversified program of vaudeville.

A minstrel show that knocked them over; an Orpheum sketch, singles, doubles and a one-act burlesque, "When Caesar Ran a Newspaper," but feebly conveys a hint of the bill which carried names known all over the world.

Chairman J. Frank Glendon announced that there would be one of the same, with different acts and numbers, every now and then. For us, the more the better.

"Teddy," the Mack Sennett dog actor, is starting on Orpheum time this Monday in a single act. His trainer, Joe Simpkins, is taking him.

Denton Vane, formerly with Vitagraph, is appearing in Los Angeles on the Orpheum circuit.

Lester Adams, of the Pickford-Fairbanks studio, is staging an entertainment which will take place on the nights of September 28-29-30, at the Ambassador theater. Those in the cast are Murray F. Bernard, Charlotte Wood, Claude Gibson, John Bribner and Ann Newhardt. The title of the piece is "Lawdy W'ut a Night."

RAZE ASTRA STUDIO

The Astra studio, on the Verdugo road in Glendale, is being razed. It has been quiet since June, when a series of Baby Marie Osborne pictures were completed. Fred Caldwell, Jimmie Adams, Jack White, Lloyd Hamilton, Helen Gibson and Lew Cody have worked there in the past two years.

Ben Grose, Santa Fe boilermaker, posed as Crane Wilbur and asked the Venice and Santa Monica chamber of commerce to help him find young men and girls for a big film feature. He is now in jail.

Sam Mogi's first two-reel comedy, starring Max Mogi and little Bebe Ellen, is now under process of editing. Final arrangements for a preview have been completed.

Jack Mintz was gag man for the "Ghost Breaker," starring Wallace Reid, and now showing at a local theater.

Immediately after her arrival in Los Angeles, Mabel Normand and her producer, Mack Sennett, will go over the story already selected and make ready for the screening of her next starring vehicle, the title of which is not announced.

Kathryn McGuire is expected to return to the Sennett studio shortly, when plans will be discussed for her future appearance in Sennett comedies. It is understood that owing to her recent success in "The Shriek of Araby," she will continue to support Ben Turpin.

Ben Hewlett has finished his second engagement with the Irving Cummings productions, playing the part of Willy-boy Tober in "Chicago Sal."

A screen magazine to be known as "The Graphic," will be issued by Educational, beginning October 1. There will be fifty-two issues a year. "The Graphic" will put into pictures genuinely dramatic and appealing short stories taken from life itself.

We have another little prize winner in Dorothy Sacy, who is proving that her acting ability is not unmatched by her beauty.

Frank S. Mattison of the Sanford productions has just returned from a trip covering all the distributing centers of the United States, with the result that the Tweedy series of two-reel comedies, and the Pete Morrison series of Semi-Westerns are now sold for the entire world rights.

POLA NEGRI ARRIVES

Pola Negri is becoming acclimated to California and, with George Fitzmaurice, is making preparations for "Bella Donna."

She was greeted by swarms of reporters and photographers on her arrival Monday, and Tuesday met the dramatic editors and motion picture correspondents at a dinner in her honor at the Ambassador.

John Flynn, director of foreign distribution and exploitation for Famous Players-Lasky (and incidentally the new president of the A. M. P. A.), introduced Miss Negri, while Jesse L. Lasky and Fitzmaurice said a few informal words.

Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society had a meeting scheduled for last Thursday evening at the Metro studios. The committee for the annual picnic was to give a report, together with the safety committee which will visit the various studios to arrange a universal safety program. G. M. MacCormac, of the Charles Ray studios, is president.

A REAL STAR CAST

The press agent's wildest orgy of description and adjectives has been so far outdone right here in Hollywood, that his most stupendous effort sinks into oblivion with a faint, sizzling sound.

"The Midsummer Night's Dream," to glorify the Hollywood bowl, October 7, without question of a doubt, carries the greatest list of stars, at least monetarily speaking, of any ten entertainments ever given upon this old globe.

A conservative estimate of salaries which necessarily would have to be paid, should these artists consent to appear, including a two-week's rehearsal, totals the sum of $675,000 easily. And the overhead would add at least $25,000 to this amount.

One performance!

Represented in cost, $700,000!

Whew!

You don't believe it?

Look at the names of this cast as provided by the Directors' Association, which is putting on the great Shakespearian event for the actors' fund benefit:

Charles Chaplin, Jackie Coogan, Pola Negri, William Farnum, Charles Ray, Viola Dana, Mary Miles Minter, Agnes Ayres, Florence Vidor, Mae Murray, Priscilla Dean, Bebe Daniels, Dorothy Phillips, Clara Kimball Young, Helene Chadwick, Bert Lytell, Larry Semon, Fred Niblo, Colleen Moore, Doris May, Ethel Grey Terry, Mae Bush, Virginia Valli, Enid Bennett, Shirley Mason, Louise Dresser, J. J. Dowling, Wm. Desmond, Wallace Beery, Patsy Ruth Miller, Lionel Belmore, Tully Marshall, Mitchell Lewis, Otis Harlan, Jane Novak, Kathlyn Williams, Ruth Roland, Edna Purviance, Lottie Pickford, Marie Prevost, Mabel Normand, Wanda Hawley, Anna Q. Nilsson, Lois Wilson, Gertrude Astor, Madge Bellamy, Marjorie Daw, Marguerite De la Motte, Bessie Love, Lila Lee, Carmel Myers, Ruth Renick, Pauline Starke, Estelle Taylor.

CLARKE MADE LASKY'S AIDE

Jesse Lasky has a new assistant. He is Victor H. Clarke, who will act as connecting link between the Paramount official and his writers, directors and stars.

A personal aid has been found necessary by Lasky in order that the latter may give more of his personal attention to special productions. Clarke has been on the job since August 1, but the studio has just made the announcement. Charley Eyton remains as business manager of Lasky's.

HAS PERUVIAN FILM

Victor I. Mackenzie, cameraman with Fox in the east, and in motion pictures since 1910, is in Hollywood after three years making commercial films in Peru.

Horsley laboratory is printing 4000 feet made by Mackenzie for a chemical concern. In filming this he spent one month in the uncultivated interior of Peru, riding 240 miles on horseback and travelling two weeks on foot over trails. The film show valuable properties growing wild, which are expected shortly to be developed on the strength of this photographic record.

Chatter of Southland Folks - By.... Harry Burns

Carl Stecker stood in the midst of a lion's den at ease with the world in an impersonation of "Daniel" in the lions den, that Harry Pollard worked into his "Leather Pusher," with Reginald Denny as the lead. Curley Stecker and his staff handled the lions in the scenes.

John Boyle was escorted to San Pedro the other day by S. M. Herzig, Paul Weigel and a host of other friends who were bidding bon voyage on his journey to the old country where he and Bill Alder will bring back some unbelievable views.

Andre Anderson played a college professor for Chris Martin the other day, while the latter was filming a Indian comedy drama, which he expects to release in Mexico and South America, afterwards making a series of such pictures.

Otto Fries is still doing the heavy work for the Hamilton White interests.

Jimmy Kelly will produce his own two-reel comedies, calling the mthe "Doings of Kelly." The company is to be known as the "Kelly Feature Film company."

Gene Barr is now working with the Lloyd Hamilton company.

Vernon Dent expects to be working at the Ince studios in "The Blood Bond."

Alice Lake does her own original dance in "Chicago Sal," Irving Cummings' first production for Principal Pictures Corporation, in which Miss Lake plays one of the featured roles.

Ralph Dixon, who cut Thomas H. Ince's "Hail the Woman," has just completed editing and titling a new Ince special, "Ten Ton Love," which features an elephant in a leading role. "Oscar," the biggest star of all, is said to be uncannily intelligent in his performance in the story.

Andree Peyre, Pathe player, has arrived at her mother's home in Paris and has thoroughly recovered from her recent attack of appendicitis, according to word received here today.

Nannie Mason, daughter of the comedian, Dan Mason, is recovering from a severe attack of diphtheria.

The new cast of the Ruth Roland serial, with George Marshall directing, Joe McCloskey co-directing, is completed. Jack Daugherty, Francis Ford and Eulalie Jensen have important roles.

William Steiner, sole owner of the "William Steiner Productions," soon will arrive in Hollywood, to pay a visit to his "Neal Hart" unit.

Mrs. Francis Carpenter, mother of the kid star who did Jack in "Jack and the Bean Stalk," played a good bit in the S. M. Herzig production.

Clyde Vineyard is technical director for "The Choice Productions" at Universal.

Blanche Rose played a Norwegian doctor's wife in the Jane Novak special that was recently made by Chester Bennett at the R-C studios, from the book of "Thelma."

Violet Radcliffe is anxious to get back into the movie game after taking a short rest long enough to take the marriage vows.

Edward Peil has a part in Charles R. Seeling's "The Purple Dawn," similar to his portrayals in "Broken Blossoms" and "Dream Street."

Josephine Adair worked for Fred Hibbard the other day at the United studio.

Olin Francis is one of the bad men of the Lester Cuneo pictures now in the making at the Fine Arts studios.

Dorothy Vernon is playing an odd character part in the Bobby Vernon comedy now in the making at Christy studio.

James Clemens has been engaged to assist Scott Sidney at Christy studios.

Gordon Hollingshead severed his connections with the Fox company and three hours later was with R-C, assisting W. K. Howard on "Captain Fly-By-Night."

William Baudine has directed everything now from a horse opera to a one-reel slap stick comedy. William used to cut pictures over on one of the well-known studio lots for a little over $25 a week; he felt sure he had a trail open to him to travel the road of success, and leaving slap stick comedies, he joined the more refined ranks, and then features. Now he is figuring out stunts for no one else but Tom Mix in a Fox feature.

Ernest Torrence is working in "The Covered Wagon," under the direction of James Cruze.

H. D. Newcomb is backing S. M. Herzig in the financial end of his series of comedies that he is producing at Universal City.

Fay McKenzie has a part in the King Baggett story at Universal City.

Donald Hughes is busy at the Hal E. Roach studios. In the last picture he played Harold Lloyd as a youngster.

Fred Tyler will aid Rupert Julian when the latter starts his picture at the Big U.

Scott Sidney is once more at work at Christies. This time he is doing one of those satires on Hollywood with some of the things that Hollywooders are supposed to do.

Bruce Mitchell brought back contracts from the East for Fat Karr, to be featured in a series of two-reelers which will be made at the Cosmosart studios with the latter directing and Vernon Walker as cameraman.

Vernon Dent is working at Universal City.

Dolly Rich played a charming widow in the Cruelywed comedy made at Universal. Francis Carpenter played her son.

George Speer, stunt actor, is working over on the United lot where Ray Hunt is assisting Fred Hibbard direct Lige Cromiey and Jimmy Adams.

Ed Kennedy is going in for producing his own comedies.

Chris Martin has finished his first story that he has been working in and producing. After this subject is cut and titled he intends to start another two-reeler.

William Worthington is once more with the Universal directing Frank Mayo.

C. M. Franklin is getting ready to start a series of two-reel animal and kiddie comedies with Nate Watt.

Al E. Christie has been cutting Bobby Vernon and Dorothy De Vore stories which he recently directed.

William Desmond is doing a serial "Around the World in 18 Days," under the direction of Reaves Eason.

Little Napoleon, that chimpanzee with the almost human brain, didn't sail for Honolulu with his trainer, Andre Anderson, last week. The trip was cancelled owing to a sudden cold coming upon the animal that caused his doctor to order him to stay at home.

Several American players and directors who sailed merrily for the old country with visions of easy money and a big cleanup, have "written home for money." The Friars' Club is planning a benefit in New York for the wanderers.

The Screen Writers' Page - Conducted by William E. Wing

Another Hays Wanted

BOY, page Mr. Literary Hays.

We do not know in which lobby you will find him, hotel or political, but you will know him because of his high forehead highly corrugated from deep thought over matters which are beyond the bell hop.

Perchance you will discover him confounding science, which easily could prove that such a man does not permeate the earth; or, try in all the natural hideouts where a literary giant would flee to escape those who would seek advice upon marvelous scenarios or wondrous fiction tales.

When you find him, radio in and the film colony will send its best ropers, champion wrestlers and successful hog-tiers to run down, rope, subdue and bind this much-needed savior.

We all can use Mr. Literary Hays in our business for, being the choice of the industry, he will have knowledge of the only thing that will save pictures from a stunted growth if not oblivion, and that knowledge must be—

Unerring judgment of the stories which should be filmed.

To make this statement ten years ago would have meant a reward like boiling in oil, but mighty few of the rather cowed manufacturers are denying now that it is the story—properly handled of course—that makes or breaks.

Therefore while our pioneer Hays is protecting the business of pictures, let us have Mr. Literary Hays on the job to see that Mr. Business Hays has pictures which are worthy of being protected.

Of course, there is the little thing of getting the manufacturers to agree that this entirely worthy person shall choose all the stories for the productions, a simple thing which probably would pass by an unanimous, rising vote.

And a tidy little job which our new Hays could, of course, easily perform, especially if he had the assistance of a twin brother for each studio, said kin being fully as fit for the job.

Of course, some manufacturer might hold out. For example the studio manager who looks over the story brought him so enthusiastically by the editor, director and star. He admits it is a corking scenario but decides he will not do it.

Why?

"Because I don't like it."

A few editors, directors and stars might also have objections, especially those who have the following objections to admittedly good stories:

- Too long.
- Too short.
- We do not use male stars.
- We do not use female stars.
- The story does not fit our stars.
- Your story does not call for enough sets and crowd.
- Your story would be too expensive to produce.
- Our star does not play anything in which she cannot wear many stylish gowns.

- We now want small town stuff.
- We are only looking for society background.

—We have never done this style of story.
—We prefer published stories because they carry the approval of an editor and the public.

—We pay our director to write as well as produce all our stories.

—There is not enough comedy in your story.

—Your story is too light.

—Our star would refuse to play the character your story gives her.

—Our leading man objects to the importance you give the other male role.

—We were going to purchase this story, but have decided to change the character of our productions.

—We are only seeking quiet stories without high dramatic background.

—We care only for colorful, forceful stories.

—We are not interested in psychology.

—Your plot is not deep enough.

—We played a story recently which had to do with a husband and wife.

Oh boy, never mind hunting for Hays No. 2; but you might bring us a chunk of ice wrapped in a towel.

Queries and Retorts

Anaheim Reader—The studios recognize the fact that good stories are being turned down, but, under the reader system, the authorities see but a limited proportion of scenarios submitted.

Cooney—The director you mention is noted for the fault. A number of scripts have never been returned by him. If you are a member of the Screen Writers' Guild, have the grievance committee handle the case for you.

Is it better to have an agent handle your stories? VIOLET MACKAY.
No; in most cases.

There is a man named Hokum in Los Angeles. Can he take out that copyright and collect on it?

Now, Pat B., you are spoofing us.

S. A. D. wants to know "how to go from summer to winter" in a story.

You evidently mean that skidding period called time elapse. You might try a subtitle, but don't leave a summery scene with shirt-waist weather and plunge into a blizzard with such a title as: "That winter."

Yes, Universal, Goldwyn, Fox and R. C. are some who are "really in the market for stories." Study Camera's "pulse."

Hays: (Any relation?) Camera! frequently has explained that if the story carries high entertainment from beginning to end, no deep plot is necessary so long as the ground-work is pleasing and satisfactory.

C. S., Portland—Yes, and we know of a director who, in making an independent production, screened himself as the author, "from a story suggested by Mr. Blank." Insist that your name appears upon the screen as author of your own stories. Then allow them to whoop up the adapter all they wish.

Lost Angels, Sept. 23, 1922.

Dear Glanditis:

I said I would rite you when I got my first check for a skenario. Well, I'm goin to rite you enyway. My skenario has playd the dooce in the pitcher colony. Everyone likes it but is sendin it back becaus I didn't send it to them first.

The Famus Stayers writes: "Your story has no plot, but the novility of dressin your Sandwitch islanders in Eskimonas moren makes up for it." The Faux studelum had a lotta praise among which is this: "No one could do more to this story that you have, and when was you a butcher?" Then Col. Seligman sent it back remarkin: "I would put on your skenario but I don't wanta make the wild animiles eny wilder." Ecetrum from meny others.

So I'm writin' another one and will make copies for all of them. It will be calld: "The Crown Jools, a Sad Sob From the Tene-mints." It oughta be good fer Recks Ingrain or Mack Scenitit.

Will let you know when I git my first check.

"CRANKSHAFT" JOE.

P. S.—No, don't put raisins in it. I lost a batch that way.

ANNA MERICAN SAYS:

"I can't let my little daughter read the Sunday papers. She asks too many embarrassing questions about those sermon subjects played up in circus style in paid advertisements."

Sure It's True

If it really happened, don't write it.

Posterity stories are all right but, after all, what has posterity ever done for any of us?

The eskimo wife who loved her pet sea-lion more than her husband, does not constitute a picture triangle, Bertie.

The U. S. C. president thinks pictures are a menace, yet he has started a course for future real estate sharks. Can you beat it?

South Sea island pictures are acceptable, but the average writer seems to think that a coral reef, twin palms and a bunch of hula girls comprise the whole shooting match.

Strictly western pictures are little in demand. A few scattering independents put them on now and then, but the field of sale is barren.

The comedy drama is holding its own nobly. Get a kinky, twisty and unique idea, toss in some human touches, then encase it in a wholesome comedy, and you have what quite a number of persons are looking for.

Pulse of the Studios

For Week Starting Monday, October 2

Professionals are requested to report to Camera! by phone or letter experiences with any company or studio that professes to teach acting, that is operated by non-professional persons, or that does not utilize players in its productions. Contemporary Criticisms

"BURNING SANDS" (Paramount)

It is a typical George Melford production, rather spectacularly handled and with the director's customary care and attention to detail and a bid for a punch in the climax. He works up a good suspense toward the close and all the more dramatic moments carry a force that make them register definitely. The story contains good screen material and it has been well adapted by Olga Printzlau and Waldemar Young. It may strike some as being fairly illogical at times. . . . The cast is very good.

—Film Daily.

"Burning Sands" is hot stuff. The story may follow in a familiar path but the ultra rapid action and the magnificence of the sets and appurtenances obliterates that fact.

Also it has an added appeal and a superb performance in the most sympathetic role of the picture contributed by Jacqueline Logan. . . . She quite runs away with the picture, even taking into consideration the fine work by nearly everybody in a large and well known cast.

George Melford . . . has been given a theatrically melodramatic story to handle and he has kept the spirit of the thing. It is frankly "meller," and good entertainment as such.

—Moving Picture World.

Merely placing a fugitive from civilization near an oasis in the desert and presenting him as one of nature's noblemen when the girl comes into his life is too simple. Even with the colorful background . . . and all the other atmospheric details enhancing it, the story is too obvious, too sugar coated with sentiment and virtue to quicken the pulse and stimulate the imagination. "Burning Sands" is trite. Milton Sills extracts every vital element from the characterization. His performance, almost convincing, and the picturesque background, offer some compensation for a mediocre story.

—Motion Picture News.

There is nothing that is especially novel about the plot but the handling is first rate. The stupendousness of the Oriental settings is a feature of the picture that will attract every eye. Milton Sills does some good work in his role as Daniel Lane. Cecil Holland is an appealing figure as the old Sheik.

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"LOVE IS AN AWFUL THING" (Selznick)

Another good comedy and wholesome entertainment, but not up to the pace set by "Reported Missing." The story isn't as strong as Moore's previous vehicle and situations are not big enough to carry the feature to the footage given and be continuously funny. Victor Heerman gets plenty of laughs out of the situations, but he makes the mistake of using one idea too long and occasionally spoiling the effect of the first laugh by repeating the same stunt. Moore is splendid in the role of the willing-to-be-husband . . . once more he scores as a comedian.

—Film Daily.

A cheery farce, well acted and one that will please the majority. The situations are funny, the titles well written and the cleverness shown in handling the slender plot marks Victor Heerman an adept at handling farce comedy. Owen Moore fits his role to a "T" and as the bashful suitor he's a scream. Alice Howells work has improved 100 per cent since her Chicago slapstick comedy days. Marjorie Daw is especially pleasing and Katherine Perry (Mrs. Moore) is adequate. Most pleasing also was the work of Charlotte Mineau as the blackmailing vamp. A comedy touch of importance was contributed by Douglas Carter, as the porter, and Snitz Edwards in the role of Superintendent of the apartment.

—Exhibitors Herald.

Despite the many twists in the plot it is so cleverly handled that there is no difficulty in following the story; the action moves smoothly. The unexpected always happens in this feature, which develops and maintains the suspense element to a degree rather unusual in comedy films. Owen Moore plays . . . with humorous zest and crisp energy, somehow giving you the impression that the star really enjoys the role.

Pretty Marjorie Daw is charming. Charlotte Mineau is an extremely attractive Marion and adequate support is rendered by other members of the company.

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

There is no one thing directly responsible for the delightful farce comedy emanating from this picture. A well knitted scenario has been made and this has been handled in direction by the same man in such a way that all the comedy value has been realized. Alice Howell, the well-known farceuse, is delightful in every one of the many scenes she plays. The title writer has augmented the comedy with some snappy stuff.

—Moving Picture World.

This bubble foams with breezy incident, giving Moore a happy role which he plays in a mocking manner. There are no gaps—the actors jumping on the scene to complete the incident without making it seem obvious. The negro comedian Douglas Carter, playing a porter, puts over a Bert Williams touch. . . . Arthur Hoyt makes a fussy valet and lawyer highly amusing. In all the picture is an enjoyable skit—one well played, captioned, directed, and photographed.

—Motion Picture News.

"LITTLE WILDCAT" (Vitagraph)

The most prominent and outstanding feature of this latest Vitagraph release is the marked improvement in the acting of the star. . . . Alice Calhoun does probably the best work of her career so far. The story itself isn't anything unusual nor original. There are a few instances wherein Director Devar might have been a trifle more explicit and at the same time not been accused of using unnecessary detail. The subtitles are occasionally poorly written, or at least, not in good taste. The photography is very good and lightings also.

—Film Daily.

The personality of the star has been played up with considerable more understanding than some of her other recent vehicles. Alice Calhoun reveals an unsuspected exuberance of spirit. . . . While the course of the story is at times jerky and forced, it nevertheless affords, because of its many twists, a chance to show her responsiveness to many moods.

—Moving Picture World.

Vitagraph seems to be having a difficult time finding an ideal story for Alice Calhoun. Its characterization is far more important than its plot. . . . The plot isn't always convincing. However, it is interesting most of the way and doubtless the seamy side of life as depicted in the early reels will score more readily than the society episodes. The picture suffered in its editing. . . . The picture is well staged, carries good atmosphere, and is capably played by the cast.

—Motion Picture News.

This picture has little to recommend it except a pretty star. There is so much plot that it is impossible to go into it further than to say that it extends over six years before, during and after the war. Alice Calhoun . . . has poise and grace rather than the tricks of an ingenue or the facility of a comedian, but no one seems to consider this in casting her. Hoydens, children and character parts are not her metier and it is a pity to waste her on such material.

—Morning Telegraph.

"HEROES AND HUSBANDS" (First National)

This is really a good picture. It is a feature that has a story with a real twist bound to get to any picture house audience. The company is a corking one with several screen names of value in support of the star, which, coupled with good direction and photography, places the picture in the class of being unusual. Chet Withey did the direction most capably and got some real suspense at times. It was Mona Kingsley as the wife of the publisher that landed most heavily. . . . She did two or three very natural things in the role that took whole scenes away from the star.

—Morning Telegraph.

"Heroes and Husbands" affords pleasing entertainment but appears to be slightly long drawn out. The plot is another one of the triangle stories and embodies a play within a play. . . . a splendid vehicle for Katherine McDonald. The idea of the amateur theatrical among the guests is good but is a little overworked and grows monotonous before the real climax is reached. Nigel Barrie gives a good account of himself in the hero role. The photography throughout is first rate. The exteriors are pleasing and the interiors are also good; detail well cared for and continuity satisfactory.

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Heroes and Husbands" is a really fine dramatic narrative, well acted, well directed, well photographed. Katherine McDonald is one of the stars who knows how to act, and her supporting cast has helped her wonderfully. The work of Charles Clary and Charles Gerrard is very good indeed. . . . The story gives opportunity for several bits of subtlety which are aptly carried out by intelligent acting and directing.

—Motion Picture News.

People

Stanley Orr has been appointed business manager for the Belasco productions at Universal City, where a special feature is being directed by Dallas M. FitzGerald. Mr. Orr recently completed a similar engagement for the J. K. McDonald productions at the Hollywood studios.

Lloyd Hughes, after several years of contract service under Thomas H. Ince, has started playing the leading male role in "Are You a Failure?" which Tom Forman is directing at the Louis B. Mayer studios.

Gaston Glass has started interpreting the title role in "The Hero," for B. P. Schulberg under the direction of Gasnier. Barbara LaMarr is playing opposite him.

Frank Lloyd is taking a week off in the mountains of Southern California with Jack Coogan, Sr.

Elinor Glyn says she may take up film directing for an English company. She admits that ambition in a letter written to Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn's vice-president.

Frank Coleman has finished his fifth picture with Erle Kenton at the Fox studio.

Stuart Hunter has finished playing a leading role in the Jack O'Brien picture "One Glorious Day."

Pauline Toler will be "a charter member" of the newly organized stock company of the production department of the Palmer Photoplay corporation.

Martha Franklin was a visitor at Camera's office yesterday. She played the mother of Gloria Hope in "Trouble."

Fenwick Oliver has finished with Al Green in "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," and is now playing a Viennese officer in the Imperial court in Von Stroheim's production, "The Merry-Go-Round."

Henry McCarty, director, is now busily engaged writing continuity for his next story, which will enter production shortly at the Fine Arts studios.

Florence Gilbert returned from a trip with the William Fairbanks company who have been shooting some western scenes up in the hills.

Mitchell Lewis is playing in the Belasco production of "Her Price" to be made at the Universal studios.

Anthony Paul Kelly, one of the veteran scenario writers, says he had quit the photoplay game. He has four reasons—four accepted stage plays.

John Ince is one of those-about-town in little old Noo York at present.

Thomas Ricketts has a good part in "Her Price," which is being directed by Dallas M. FitzGerald at Universal.

RELEASES FROM BROADWAY

By Raymond McKee

Wm. Fox Jr., alias Arthur Strange, is thinking it over in jail. Strange passed over $3,500 worth of checks under the assumed name of Wm. Fox Jr. Thirty-five checks were returned to the producer Wm. Fox before the "Son" walked into the Hotel Pennsylvania and asked the desk to cash a draft for $150. The clerk telephoned Mr. Fox who declared he had no son. The police were called and "Jr." was properly cared for.

B. P. Schulberg, president of the Preferred Pictures, announces the purchase of the screen rights to "The Hero," a stage success which ran at the Belmont last season.

Charles Murray and Mrs. Murray arrived last week from Hollywood with the "flu" and a big notion to go right back "from whence they came."

Legislators at Washington are about to pass upon a new child labor bill, under which it will become a crime to employ a child under eighteen. This of course includes all the moving picture kiddies from "Jackie" down.

Myron Selznick reports that he will produce "Rupert of Hentzau," the sequel to "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Marguerite Courtot will play "Jacqueline" in the James Oliver Curwood story entitled "Jacqueline." She is ably supported by Effie Shannon, Edmund Breeze and Lew Cody. Del Henderson will direct. Locations near Quebec and Portland will be used.

Wm. Randolph Hearst's Alan Crosland company left Saturday on the U. S. S. President Harding, for Paris and Monte Carlo to do a feature, starring Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens. Buster Collier and Gareth Hughes are in the cast.

Thomas Dixon, author, has his own producing organization. He will produce his own plays and stories at the Tilford 44th street studios. Production started this week.

Raymond McKee's first picture for Hodkinson includes Charlie Murray, Mary Anderson, Flora Finch and a host of others.

Story By

"The Kidnappers" is one of the "Scarlet Car" stories by Richard Harding Davis, in which Herbert Rawlinson is starring under the direction of Stuart Paton.

"The Summons" is a story by George Patullo, which Universal bought for Frank Mayo's use. William Worthington is directing him.

Lois Zellner wrote the original story of "Her Price" for Dallas M. FitzGerald who is directing it for the Edward Belasco productions.

Continuity by

Bob Horner for the "Midnight Hummer," an original story. (Western Arts).

George Randolph Chester for "The Kidnappers" and "The Summons." (Universal.)

Mack Sennett's scenario forces are preparing Mabel Normand's next stellar vehicle; Turpin's next comedy, and a comedy-drama to serve Phyllis Haver as her first starring picture.

THE MAN ON THE COVER

Joe Roberts, who is being featured by the Fox Film corporation in a series of domestic comedies, commenced his professional career when he was seventeen, with Lillian Russell in light opera. Then he went into farce with Mark Murphy, and later into drama, playing Taffy in "Trilby" with the Brady company.

Two years ago Buster Keaton persuaded Joe to give up vaudeville and become a silversheet heavy in his comedies. His success was instantaneous, and was followed by the offer from the Fox interests. His first picture, directed by Slim Summer-ville, has been finished, and he will soon begin on the second of the series under the direction of Norman Taurog.

IRENE HUNDT

who is associated with Universal wishes to announce that from this date forward she will be known as to avoid confusion with another Irene Hunt in motion pictures.

RIENE RALEIGH

CAPT. T. W. MOORE, FAMOUS SWIMMER, FEATURED IN HIS OWN STORY, "HUMAN SALVAGE"

CAPTAIN T. W. SHEFFIELD, better known as T. W. Moore, the father of the two clever young actors, Pat and Micky Moore, recently sold his water story, "Human Salvage," to the Murry N. Fay Productions, Inc., of San Francisco.

Captain T. W. Sheffield is one of the world's authorities on life saving and swimming, having written several books on the subject. While in Canada in 1908 he swam across Niagara, below the suspension bridge, representing that country in the World's Life Saving Competition in London, for the King Edward VII. cup in 1911, and tying with C. M. Daniels, the world's champion speed swimmer, in competition for the same trophy in 1905; in the same year swimming 27 miles in the English Channel, in an attempt to swim from Dover to the shores of France. Colonel Roosevelt wrote, congratulating him on his attempt, the King of England graciously accepting a copy of one of his books, "The Art of Natation," in 1911.

In 1915 he was appointed Divisional Field Representative, Pacific Division, American Red Cross. Many of the best life savers on the coast and nine hundred members of the R. O. T. C. at Camp Kearney in 1918, were instructed by him, under the command of General Kuhen. For his fifteen years' voluntary service in life saving he was made an honorary life member of the Royal Life Saving Society of Great Britain, having several rescues to his credit by its methods, and was presented with a silver cup by the mayor and citizens of Santa Monica for similar rescues.

He is being featured in his own story, "Human Salvage," making many spectacular rescues under actual conditions from water planes, speed boats and rough surf. His sensational dive off the gangplank when acting as one of the pirates in Maurice Tourneur's production, "Treasure Island," made one of the thrills of that famous story. He is well known in the studios for his technical work in sea stories.

In the production that Captain Sheffield is working on now, he is supported by Captain Wellington, who has had experience over seas during the late war, both being with the Emergency Shipping Board.

Mr. Murry N. Fay, of slow motion picture fame, who did such wonderful photography in slow action with Annette Kellerman, Mary Pickford and others, is now directing at Catalina with his company. Mr. R. P. Putney, a man of wide experience, is in charge of the camera, where many thrilling episodes are being shot. The company, of which Murry N. Fay is president, is being financed by several influential capitalists of San Francisco. They have under consideration the purchase of Captain Sheffield's sea story, "The Spirit of Hope," which was written from thirty years' sea-going experience. The cost of producing this story will be over $50,000.00. Mr. T. Hays Hunter, the director, considers it one of the finest stories of those who go down to the sea in ships.

IF YOU make something, or sell something, that you would be just as glad to buy, if you were at the other end of the deal, as you are to sell it.

Invents "Phonofilm"

Talking moving pictures have been developed by Dr. Lee de Forest and will be shown in New York City this month. The doctor calls his process "Phonofilm." This he claims, photographs the voice. In general he outlines it as follows:

Taking the Picture

1. Sound waves (voice of actor) translated into electrical waves.
2. Electrical waves translated into light waves.
3. Light waves recorded on the edge of the film.

Reproducing the Picture

1. Light waves translated back into electrical waves.
2. Electrical waves translated back into sound waves.
3. Sound waves amplified with loud speakers placed near the screen.

He claims that the apparatus for registering sound waves can easily be annexed to any motion picture camera.

OUR OFFICE DUMBBELL

Thinks that the Writers' Club is a weapon the scenarist always carries when he calls upon a studio editor.

SETS A LA CARTE

A new studio has been built at Yayhank, L. I., that will accommodate thirty companies at one time. A new arrangement it seems. When a set is finished it automatically moves out of the studio on a moving platform idea and the next set moves in fully ready to shoot. No striking of set while working. The set is moved in by a platform of place and dressed, sent in on a platform as it were. It cost a few million to build. No delays or waits.

In the Ring With Toreador

Rodolph is a sportsman. He waited for the deer season to open before asking more money. (Diagram: Becoming more "dear.")

Probably Lasky doesn't see the humor in a comic Valentino at this time of year.

All Rodolph has to do to go on strike is muss his hair up.

If he's too recalcitrant, his director may have to resort to forcible manicuring.

From one issue daily film paper:

Item I.—"Richard Walton Tully left for New York yesterday with a completed copy of 'Omar, the Tentmaker.'"

Item II.—"Richard Walton Tully arrived in New York yesterday from Los Angeles, bringing with him 'Omar, the Tentmaker.'"

So the transportation problem is solved at last!

NOTE TO THE COPYDESK

William D. and Cecil B. are brothers, it is true; but when you spell their surnames there are different things to do. For William, spell it lower case—"de Mille" (that's modesty). But when you write C. B. DeMille, why use a big, big "D"!

It is reported that the soviet government desires picture producers in Russia, to give the industry an impetus there. The government will finance one-half cost of production.

The undertakers probably will be glad to do the rest.

From an Eastern trade journal:

"The Motion Picture Directors' association staged 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' in the Bowl the night of September 7."

Speed in communication of news grows more marvelous every day.

If "Miss America" comes to Hollywood to go in the movies she'll find Christian-nameless company in the well known persons of Miss duPont and Miss Take.

Frank E. Woods says that the beginner in golf should hire a caddy whose education in mathematics has been almost totally neglected.

AND KEEP IT!

Director of a certain well-known star phoned Dr. Sidney R. Broadbent to hurry over with his clinical thermometer.

On arrival the director asked the doctor to take the Trade headline.

"HOLLYWOOD" POPULAR NAME

"Hollywood" is a popular word in Chicago amusement circles. Will Morrissey put on "Hollywood Follies." One of Shubert's vaudeville units is "The Hollywood Flappers." And a one-night stand comedy-drama is called "Sins of Hollywood." A cabaret is named "Hollywood Beauties."

This being in Chicago, it may refer to Hollywood, Ill. But probably not.

RIVAL "ROBIN HOOD"

Doug Fairbanks has a rival to his version of "Robin Hood." It is being shown as a University of Wisconsin Film Classic. The cast includes William Russell, Harry Benham and Mignon Anderson.

ANNOUNCEMENT

INTERNATIONAL FLATTERY

The Motion Picture Studio, a British film weekly, is finding Camera! a valuable reference work.

Camera!'s famous department, "Pulse of the Studios," is lifted bodily as a heading to list British film productions. "Who's Where" is another departmental head the English magazine uses, while use is made of a Camera! editorial and a Camera! promotion advertisement.

Camera! is glad to serve as an international medium for the exchange of film news. Foreign publications are welcome at all times to avail themselves of Camera!'s articles and information.

A Motion Picture Exposition

IT IS Camera's privilege today to announce the greatest event in the history of motion pictures:

The first Motion Picture Exposition, to be an annual event, will be held in Los Angeles, probably in June, 1923, under the auspices of the motion picture industry.

Glorious with lights and color, decorated in a manner as only the co-ordinated efforts of many fine artists of the studios could accomplish, the first Motion Picture Exposition will bring before the public every process in the art-industry from manufacture of basic film to its projection in the theaters.

The exposition's aim—to tell the world about motion pictures.

FOR months plans for the exposition have been formulated in secret.

This week the impressive plan passed the borderline that separates Perhaps from Certainty

The municipal government of Los Angeles and various commercial and civic bodies have promised to extend co-operation toward the success of the first Motion Picture Exposition, which will draw scores of thousands of visitors to the southland.

The Motion Picture Producers' association announces its wholehearted enthusiasm over the exposition. Its studios and treasuries are pledged to the project.

Most important of all, the professional associations of motion pictures will be welcomed into the plan, each to accept definite responsibilities.

For this event is to be the art-industry's exposition, and it is hoped that every individual and every organization in motion pictures will accept an important and active part in it.

ONLY the broadest outline of the exposition now exists. Before it is carried into detail, executive committee will be organized to plan and carry out the work.

Every stage of activity will be apportioned to responsible committees, and will be handled under their supervision by those men and women most proficient, best suited for each thing.

Although the exposition of the motion picture art-industry will be international in scope and appeal, there will be more than mere exhibits to make the event memorable in the history of the cinema. Camera! will divulge this phase of the plan in a later issue.

BY ITS exposition the motion picture industry will not only gain in greater publicity and understanding. It is intended that the exposition shall be profitable—not to individuals—to the motion picture industry as a whole.

MOTION pictures, Camera! soberly believes, are destined to be the greatest of any single force in the progress of civilization.

Camera! is confident that the first Motion Picture Exposition as being planned will show the peoples of the world the genius that lies behind the screen as they have never realized it.

To that end Camera! will do heartily its share.

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

Robert Hill has started production on "Wolves of Society," a chapter play starring Jack Mulhall, with Margaret Livingston as the leading woman. Anthony Coldeway wrote it. It is being filmed under the supervision of Robert Dillon, editor of the serial scenario department.

Nat Ross is starting on "The Ghost Patrol," a film version of Sinclair Lewis' notable novel success, with an all-star cast above the average.

Lewis Sargent is starting on his eighth comedy at Universal City. Scott Darling is directing and writing the stories.

With Edward Everett Horton playing the stellar role, production started last week at the Fine Arts studios on "Trouble Buster," Jess Robbins' newest five-reel comedy drama. The story was written by Arthur Goodrich, author of "So This Is London," and was adapted to the screen by Archie MacMackin. Vernon Walker is cameraman.

Henry McCarty is preparing to start work this week at Fine Arts on a new western story with Lester Cuneo as star. The picture will present Cuneo in the role of a French-Canadian. McCarty wrote the story and will also direct.

Charles R. Seeling's next production is to be a South Sea island story, it is said. Seeling is now preparing to shoot the first scenes for the picture in about a week.

Wallace Reid starts his next Paramount picture, "Nobody's Money," October 9th, under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

"The Trail Blazers" is being prepared for Art Acord and Edward Laemmle, the "Buffalo Bill" combination. It is a chapter history of the Oregon trail.

James Leo Meehan, a comparative newcomer in the motion picture field, has been chosen by Gene Stratton Porter, the novelist, to direct a series of eight productions of her most popular stories. Production work on the first of these, "Michael O'Halloran," has begun at the Thomas H. Ince studios.

Mrs. Porter personally is supervising the filming of her stories, her daughter, Jeanette Helen Porter, being associated with Mr. Meehan as assistant director, with Tennant Wright as production manager.

George Archainbaud is preparing "The Power of a Lie," by Johann Bojer, scenarized by Charles Kenyon, famous author of "Kindling."

Short subjects and comedies, the latter starring Lew Sargent and Neely Edwards, are being produced on a schedule consistent with the best results.

We watch theater programs for John Herdman's name. For to him many pictures owe thanks for his beloved character portrayals.

The Regent company has purchased the first story which will go into production, "The Drivin' Fool," a thrilling automobile yarn, published as a short story in the Blue Book recently, film rights for which were secured from the author, William F. Sturm.

"Mud and Sand," G. M. Anderson's latest two-reeler with Stan Laurel, has entered its final stages of production at Fine Arts. The picture is a travesty on "Blood and Sand."

Edward Peil has finished a Chinese characterization in the "Purple Dawn," at Fine Arts studio.

Complete

"Another Man's Shoes" and "One Wonderful Night," both Herbert Rawlinson features. "The Hot Head," Frank Mayo.

Rowland V. Lee has finished directing "A Circus Story," starring Shirley Mason, for Fox. Cutting and titling are proceeding under his direction.

Ward Lascelle has completed his production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Mind Over Motor," starring Trixie Friganza. He will release through Hodkinson.

In Al Christie's cast for "Choose Your Weapons," featuring Bobby Vernon, are Charlotte Stevens, Earl Rodney, Victor Rodman, Lincoln Plumer and Maude Truax. The picture is now completed.

"Bull" Montana has completed "A Punctured Prince," his second Hunt Stromberg comedy for Metro, which Hughie Fay directed.

Ruth Stonehouse has finished work in "The Flash," a newspaper story, produced by Premium Pictures in Portland, Ore.

Truth About the Schools

Fake schools of acting and make-up victimize hundreds every week in Los Angeles. Camera! again states its position—WAR on fake schools.

It is not assumed that every school is a fake school. Certainly it is possible to impart rudiments of acting and of making up for the camera. But Camera! will engage in no controversy with any school as to the merits of its instruction.

Camera! intends to make it clear just where the schools are, who is connected with each one, and what methods are used.

Camera! already has a mass of information. In addition, dozens of letters, telephone messages and personal calls are being received from persons who have spent their money for lessons.

Each week Camera! will relate the truth about these schools until every one has been covered.

Scripture Films, Inc.

THIS organization, also known as Francis Engel productions, has office at 921 Loew's State building. Its stationery states "Capitalization $1,000,000."

Engel is president and general manager. The Rev. Holice B. White is vice-president and Biblical production manager. Other associates are Alfred Graham, M. D., secretary and assistant treasurer; Edgar R. Schmitz, treasurer, and Mabel E. Graham, executive secretary.

Pick up daily paper, glance down the classified columns to the heading "Employment Agencies" and you will see this ad:

CHRISTIAN PEOPLE WISHING TO WORK IN MOTION PICTURES CALL AT CHILDREN'S MOTION PICTURE MISSION ASSOCIATION, 921 LOEW'S STATE BLDG., BROADWAY AT SEVENTH.

This is a Scripture ad. "Children's Motion Picture Mission" has a harmlessly juvenile flavor. Another favorite ad reads:

CHRISTIAN MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN TO WORK IN MOVING PICTURES. Will give legal contract for 25 or 50 weeks. Salary $30 to $60 per week or more, according to ability or amount invested. Experience not necessary.

Sometimes the advertisement goes into more detail. Says one: "The following pictures will be produced: illustrated sermon and hymn, educational, children's pictures, beautiful old legends, fairy tales, dramatic features and comedy-drama."

That's comprehensive enough. It's subtly worded to appeal to persons who might feel qualms at the "terrible movies," but who are assuaged by the "illustrated sermon and hymn" thought.

A Camera! representative visited the offices of Scripture Films, and kept eyes and ears open.

The firm apparently is collecting money every day from people who want to get into pictures.

It sells 200 shares of stock at $1 a share to an applicant and in return gives a contract that agrees to employ the stockholder in motion pictures, "salary to be the same as those paid extras in other studios for similar work."

(Did you notice that phrase in the ad: "Salary . . . according to ability or amount invested?")

The contract further defines "employment to start when Scripture Films, Inc., starts active production, and providing the holder of this agreement is the right type needed for the production."

Then follows a "morality" clause—just like Universal and Lasky sign with their stars! Even that isn't all.

"Scripture Films, Inc., agrees to employ only those persons who have taken a course in the art of make-up in a school conducted by R. B. Wilcox, 643 South Olive street . . . or any other similar school approved by Scripture Films, Inc."

And the contract is void unless countersigned by R. B. Wilcox!

FOR the information of readers, Camera! herewith lists schools of motion picture acting and make-up advertising in Los Angeles papers. Experiences of Camera! operatives at these schools will be told each week.

BOYLE HEIGHTS STUDIO, 753 Boyle avenue; instruction fee, guarantees work when production is made.

308 MASON OPERA HOUSE BUILDING, 127 South Broadway; wants 50 refined men and women, charges $1 a month registration, no commissions.

PICTURE PLAYERS AGENCY, 211 Mason Opera House building; wants 15 women and girls for picture.

SCRIPTURE FILMS, Inc., 921 Loew's State building. Described on this page. Co-operates with "Film Exchange," 643 South Olive street, also described.

ELITE PRODUCTIONS, 4511 Fountain avenue, (Brentwood studio); want inexperienced persons to purchase stock, receive instruction, and take part in picture.

JACK C. O'BRIEN PRODUCTIONS, 410 Court street, wants new types, experience unnecessary, gives lessons. Has agents at room 1004, 405 South Hill street, and room 215, 321 Third street.

FASHION INDUSTRIAL FILM COMPANY, 5444 Hollywood boulevard (Assistant Directors' association rooms); Max Asher offers tuition in acting and make-up, work at studios without pay required in training.

HARRY GAYLORD PRODUCTIONS, Santa Monica and Bronson avenues (Caswell studio); want persons to invest, take instruction, and act. Works with "agency" at 646 San Fernando building.

CLASSIC FILM ACTORS AGENCY, 310-11 Grosse building; wants inexperienced talent, charges 7% placement fee. Has branch office at 734 South Olive street, "Aywon studio," which advertises for "refined picture help."

RICHARD THOMAS PRODUCTIONS, 5821 Santa Monica boulevard, (Berwill studio), wants actors to invest in units of stock, paid back with interest on release of each picture.

APOLLO FILM COMPANY, room 319, Grosse building, wants well-dressed women for movies, experience unnecessary.

216 EAST 31st STREET; want ladies and gentlemen to invest in co-operative motion picture.

NORCROSS STUDIO, 5624 Virginia avenue, teaches picture acting.

was just the right type. His black eyes would photograph much better than blue eyes, they said. He would be given a prominent part "just as soon as we start producing." Then they gave the would-be Valentino a contract, collected $25 deposit, and sent him out to gather in his friends.

The organization has written letters to judges, the wife of the president of the United States and other prominent people. The letters ask if those persons believe in clean pictures. Of course they do. Then Scripture Films prints the replies, giving the impression that those persons approve of the activities of Scripture Films, Inc.

"Film Exchange"

THIS is the make-up school at 643 South Olive street, conducted by R. B. Wilcox, mentioned in the Scripture Films contract. Investors in Scripture Films are required to take Wilcox's course in make-up instruction.

But the "Film Exchange" doesn't depend entirely upon trade "steered" from its Seventh and Broadway co-operators.

Run down the "Help Wanted" columns of your daily paper again and note this ad:

WANTED for big motion picture corp. now casting, a few new types, exp. unrec. Film Exch., 643 S. Olive, 8th floor.

Why a "film exchange"—in the usual run of film procedure the office from which completed pictures are routed to the theaters—should be seeking new talent is strange.

Everyone in Los Angeles knows that Olive street from Seventh to Tenth street is "Film Row."

The inexperienced person may not understand the difference between an exchange and a studio, and may believe he is in the center of motion picture production, of course. And the experienced person who would know better is not desired by any school of acting or make-up.

So undoubtedly the Olive street address is a happy thought.

Pretending to be a tourist "crazy to get into pictures," a Camera! representative called upon R. B. Wilcox at the "Film Exchange."

"You are just the type!" she was assured, and Wilcox explained that, as she was inexperienced (the ad stated "Experience not necessary") she would need instruction in acting. Six lessons could be had for $15 at 921 Loew's State building, he told her, lowering his voice. After the lessons, she could assuredly get a part in Scripture Films.

Wilcox's "film exchange" was until a few weeks ago at 730 South Olive street. He is now on the eighth floor at 643 South Olive street.

Where to Find People You Know

Kenneth Langley, who will be remembered as editor-in-chief for Selig, in the east, also has joined the happy throng in California. The veteran is looking them over, but has not decided where he will alight as yet.

Following his brilliant work as the heavy in "The Purple Dawn," a melodramatic story recently completed by Charles R. Seeling, Eddie Piel has been placed under contract by Seeling.

Pauline Garon, who played the flapper sister in Richard Barthelmess' production of "Sonny," has arrived in Hollywood and is working with the Cecil B. DeMille unit at the Lasky studios in a flapper part with Anna Q. Nilsson.

Harry Van Meter has temporarily left the screen to join the Wilkes Stock company in Los Angeles.

William ("Babe") Lawrence has been cast in the Jess Robbins production, "The Trouble Buster."

Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein plays a part in "What's Wrong with the Women?"

E. Mason Hopper will direct "The Little Church Around the Corner" for Warner Bros. Olga Printzlau wrote the story.

After a try-out in Long Beach, Wesley Barry, Warner Bros. popular boy star, has taken his brand new vaudeville act and bled himself to the San Francisco Orpheum, where he played a week.

Cullen Landis will play the role of the son in the Fred Niblo production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," to be released through Metro.

Adolphe Menjou is playing the role of Robert Townsend, a wealthy portrait painter in the new William de Mille production, "Paths of Glory."

Sylvia Ashton is playing an aunt-chaperone part in "The White Flower" with Betty Compson, which is being filmed in Honolulu.

Eva Novak is playing a new style screen "vamp" in Tommy Meighan's new picture, "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow."

E. Mason Hopper, former director of Goldwyn films, has been procured by Warner Bros. to direct the production of Olga Printzlau's original story, "The Little Church Around the Corner."

Jimmie Clemens, assistant director, is back at the Christie studios assisting Scott Sidney in the staging of "Hazel From Hollywood," featuring Dorothy Devore.

Neal Burns will make his next appearance in "Ocean Swells," a comedy of houseboating, which is now being produced.

Jack Henderson has returned to Century comedies. Jack is playing a canny Scotchman for Alf Goulding who is shooting the Baby Peggy story, "Little Miss Spunk," a tale of the New York underworld.

Curt Rehfeld, formerly assistant director for Rex Ingram, is assisting Irvin V. Willat.

Blanche Payson, character woman, has returned to the Century Comedy fold and is playing in support of Lee Moran in "The Boarder."

Peggy Blackwood is working in Fred Niblo's production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," as an overseas worker.

William Orlamond has been signed by Metro for a part in "All the Brothers Were Valiant."

Lon Chaney has been signed by Metro to enact the role of the elder brother, in "All the Brothers Were Valiant."

Ralph Dixon and LeRoy Stone are working together on the cutting and editing of "The Hottentot," Thomas H. Ince's film adaptation of the stage comedy.

Shannon Day has completed work in "Captain Fly-by-Night" at the R-C studios. She played the lead opposite Johnny Walker.

Irving Cummings has engaged Hal Kern to edit "Chicago Sal," for the Principal pictures corporation.

Mabel Julienne Scott has been given the leading role in "The Power of a Lie," which George Archainbaud is directing at Universal City.

John Jasper, builder of the Hollywood Studios, Inc., has re-entered the producer ranks. Jasper announces that he will go to New York in about ten days to make arrangements for the filming of five special productions. He will take with him prints of "Over Here" and "The Challenge," two five-reel special productions, which were recently completed under his direct supervision.

Louise Fazenda has received an offer to tour in the Orpheum circuit. Before her return to the coast in June, she completed a tour of the leading eastern and southern cities in the Keith circuit. At present she is working at the Warner Bros. studios in "The Beautiful and Damned."

Carmen C. Melnotte has returned from her vacation trip and will resume her work with the Cinema Players under the direction of her husband, Benjamin D. Sharpe.

Forbes Aitken, who appears in Charles R. Seeling's production of "The Purple Dawn," which has just been completed at the Fine Arts studios, has enjoyed considerable success as an author of short magazine features, and recently sold a script to Cecil B. DeMille.

Ramon Icaez, who had parts in "To Have and To Hold," "Blood and Sand," "The Young Rajah," and "The Power of Love," was featured with the Folies Bergere in Paris in 1914. He specializes in dancing parts.

Camera Boys

Ira Morgan has left for Europe to film the Cosmopolitan production of Ibanez's "The Enemies of Women," with Lionel Barrymore, Alma Rubens and other celebrities.

Robert Kurrle is in San Francisco filming "All the Brothers Were Valiant."

Ernest Palmer has returned to Hollywood from London, England. He has been away since March.

Sol Polito is photographing Edwin Carewe's "Mighty Lak a Rose" in New York City.

Bert Cann, with Eddie Polo in Austria, will leave shortly for Germany, according to a postcard received here.

Herford Tynes Cowling, globe-trotter, is in London, England, making preparations for his film trip into the interior of Africa.

Gilbert Warrenton is photographing Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends," in New York.

Current Reviews

"Skin Deep"

AFTER being deprived so long of seeing "Skin Deep," we are wondering how many more films like this Thomas Ince has been holding out in this age of hokum and dire need of good stories on the screen. However, having seen this offering we have been repaid for our waiting and would willingly wait as long again for another of the same quality.

The idea from a magazine story by Marc Edmund Jones, takes us back to the great war, only touching upon its horrors and dealing with the wonders it forced to light. The titles and bits of action throughout the play have a naturalness seldom accomplished by director or actor.

Lambert Hillyer directed a talented cast. His continuity was good and his work was backed by splendid photography. Charles Stumar was at the camera.

Beyond a doubt, Milton Sills does the best work of his career in the role of a crook who found that his character straightened with the features of his face.

To Marcia Mannon belongs the credit for leading feminine honors. Her kaleidoscopic role is met with expert ability to cope with situation after situation calling for cameleon-like emotions.

Florence Vidor has an inactive part but she is pretty and sweet and that pleases.

Frank Campeau and Joseph Singleton carry the heavy roles, further upholding their reputations in skilled acting.

Other worthy members of the cast are Charles Clary, Winter Hall, Gertrude Astor, Muriel Dana and H. B. DeLay.—R. W.

"The Fast Mail"

IT is evident from both credit sheet and five reels of film that "The Fast Mail" had no author. But Bernard Durning and his two cameramen, George Schneiderman and Don Short, did some fast stepping to keep up with the speed of the actors, horses, automobiles, hand cars and riverboats. There were so many conveyances conveniently present that we have spent many hours of meditation and wonderment over the fact, that, when the hero ("Buck" Jones) is thrown into the river from the boat, a pair of waterwings didn't float along in time to bring him safely to shore. We also wonder, why, with all their thrilling dashes the subway was overlooked.

The picture moves along like a progressive dinner. When a horse drops dead a motor car is there to relay. The well trained machine doesn't break down until it sees the fast mail train that only runs on Sundays and holidays.

Eileen Percy's role is to believe what the tea leaf fortune teller says and look pretty, which she occasionally does. She leaves no great impression of dramatic acting.

Charles ("Buck") Jones leaps from one apparently fast moving object to another without mussing up his white makeup or brilliant hair.

Adolph Menjou is one of the real actors in the cast that they didn't know what to do with after they secured him. He twirls his villainous mustache and raises his left eyebrow which is expression number 9 by the book.

James Mason does excellent work in his role of the weak brother, and splendid riding in the steeple chase.

William Steele and Harry Dunkinson, both heavies, were placed in the picture to be killed off. Their work was well done.

But the one redeeming feature of "The Fast Mail" was the tag that beamed "The End."—R. W.

Hugh Hoffman, who has been appointed supervisor of production at Universal City, overseeing the production unit headed by Gladys Walton.

"Broadway Rose"

THAT delightful human bundle of personality, Mae Murray, is with us again with her winning pout, gaspy costumes, innumerable closeups and, er, limbs, in a film sketch called "Broadway Rose."

Without Miss Murray, the so-called production would be in the can with other mistaken efforts, most of which could not possibly be in such poor health as this alleged story.

The Broadway dancer marries a son of the rich. Finding that he is something of a weakling, she goes back to the farm, and her more humble lover. Make the most of it.

Miss Murray over-acts many times and, if her stage dance is the one which made "Rose" the rage of New York, someone is raving again.

The sterling Monte Blue, always at his best, is a refreshing relief, although he has comparatively few scenes for an advertised support.

Ray Bloomer, the rich lover, grabbed the greater footage and was very good.

Just why the mightily exclusive Thompson family wanted its offspring to marry the type of woman so cleverly depicted by Alma Tell, probably will never be known.

Ward Crane, Charles Lane, Mary Turner Gordon and Mrs. Jennings gave the weak story a certain dignity through their strong personalities.

Robert Z. Leonard supervised and directed the story.—R. W.

"The Infidel"

PREFERRED Pictures has solved the problem of dragging the serial from its stamping grounds of Main street, into houses of Broadway class.

They have played Katherine MacDonald in one, but have hurled the entire mass of hokum into five reels of dizzy conglomeration. It is a south-sea island picture with not one familiar character or one formula missing.

Miss MacDonald is the infidel who lands on the island from a supposed shipwreck, to vamp the young American holding concessions there. She is employed by the villain who wants to get the island.

Now, who do you suppose the old missionary of the island is? Nothing else than the father of the wicked adventuress. His jealousy drove his wife away, many years before and now he is a missionary as atonement. But he never tells Katherine the cruel truth. He dies with his secret safe from her, after she has become converted. The usual wicked native nabob, dancing girls, battle of natives against whites; warship to the rescue; saved!

Miss MacDonald reveals even less histrionic ability than usual.

Robert Ellis, the leading man, is an actor and has nice personality.

Joseph Dowling, as the missionary, is very satisfactory.

James Young directed the potpourri.

W. W.

"Colleen of the Pines"

ONE would think that a comparatively new producer in the game would use all the modern tricks and even keep a couple of jumps ahead of ordinary film methods. But Chester Bennett uses a moss-grown story that is as familiar to the public as Little Red Ridinghood. He has filled the five reels with many meaningless close-ups of the star, with maddening regularity, and has used a hackneyed melodrama as material.

J. Grubb Alexander, the parent of the story, had better throw away his old typewriter and get one that writes at least a good continuity. There is no excuse for his story except that it is quite the thing for every producing company to have at least one Northwest Royal Mounted picture to their credit or discredit. Or it may have been time for this shopworn plot to reach the screen once more.

Alfred Allen gives a splendid performance although he is placed in ridiculous situations.

Jane Novak is a good subject for close-ups. Her lack of screen personality doesn't allow her to carry off any dramatic honors, but she can look very beautiful with backlights and that's something.

Jack Mackenzie, the photographer, made some exquisite exteriors but other parts of the film were spoiled because of an extremely bad print.

Charlotte Pierce as the younger sister made a great effort to do justice to a drab role and fairly well succeeded.

Pickups By The Staff

Paul Gerson, head of the Paul Gerson Pictures corporation of San Francisco, is serving on the committee of entertainment for the mammoth benefit for the Argonaut Mine sufferers, which is to be given next Saturday under the auspices of the combined Women's Clubs of San Francisco.

Thomas Brierley, art director for Christie Film Company, has been loaned to the Actor's fund of America to build the sets for "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which is to be staged in the Hollywood Bowl, October 7.

The Co-Operative Repertory Theatre Association, with Harl McInroy as managing director, commenced their fall and winter activities with "The Love of Su Shong," a play in three acts by De Witt Newing, which was presented at Cumnock Hall September 28th, 29th and 30th.

A cast of notable stage and screen artists were secured for this production. Among whom were Jerome Collamore, Glory Raye, who will be remembered for her delightful interpretations at the Hollywood Community Theatre; Murdock Macquarrie, Helen Eaton Behymer, Mai Wells, Taylor Graves, Percy Challenger, Graham Pettie, Profulla Ghosal, Wilson Bengel, C. E. Collins, Earle Adams, John Gough and M. F. van Lueewen.

A little negro boy named George Preston, is the latest "find" of Robert Eddy for his new Plum Center comedy, starring Dan Mason, at the Gerson studios of San Francisco. George arrived on the west coast only a few months ago from a small town in the state of Georgia, and his conversation gives the impression that he has just stepped out of one of the Octavus Roy Cohen stories.

Motion Picture Talent Register is the name of a new booking office that has opened in Los Angeles. They have evolved a unique casting system that is now well under way.

Walter Forde, the British screen comedian, will visit New York soon.

Accompanying Walter Forde on his trip is Billy Bowman, who is returning to New York. Forde expects to make a trip across the continent to California after two weeks in New York.

Eric von Stroheim's baby son will be christened St. Ritus Josef.

Ralph Cloninger, who was seen as Ferdinand in "Monte Cristo," and also has a compelling part in Reginald Barker's forthcoming "Hearts Aflame," was formerly a well-known stock actor in Salt Lake, and Spokane, and before entering pictures had his own company there.

Mildred Harris has gone into the bankrupt courts. Her debts amount to $31,411.91.

Charles Thurston is once more back with the studios. He has been laid up for over two months following an accident with an automobile. A machine ran over him as he was stepping off the street car, tearing the ligaments in his leg and seriously bruising him. He is now steadily recovering.

Mai Wells, screen and stage actress, famous for her Chinese characterizations, scored highly in an important Chinese role in "The Love of Su Shong," which was presented by the Co-operative Repertory Theatre association at Cumnock Hall under the direction of Harl McInroy.

Walter Frederick Seely is one of the newer Hollywood photographers whose work has recently been receiving wide-spread attention, especially in the various motion picture publications. In fact one of his portraits was reproduced in colors as a cover for one of the foremost of the "fan" magazines, and it seems since then the demand for his work has spread like wildfire.

Al Risley, publicity director, has just concluded a strenuous campaign for Edward Sloman productions, and is hiding out for fear someone else will put him to work ere winter comes.

They don't usually start playing characters as young as Valentine Churchill did. She is known as the little girl "with glasses" and just finished playing in "The Runaway Girl" at Universal.

What Folks Think

APPLAUDS OUR SENTIMENTS

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 27.—Editor Camera!—May I respectfully intrude upon your time long enough to express my admiration for your editorial in Camera! under date of September 21, "Give Us Censorship!"

It was just splendid, and Camera! has again demonstrated its protective attitude. All of us of the industry should be very grateful to you; individually, I am heartily so.

PICTURE CARRIES MESSAGE

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Editor Camera!—We note an article in one of your issues, a copy of which is attached hereto.

Although the firm of Warner Brothers need not apologize because every picture that they put on the market is not to the liking of some people, a great many times we do things in our lives which are for the betterment of all and not for personal benefits.

The two pictures, "Ashamed of Parents" and "Parted Curtains," were purchased by a body of women in the city of New York, many of them being of the best families here. The pictures were purchased for the purpose of being released by the Frank Hall company, but on account of this firm having gone out of business, they were turned over to us.

I had the pleasure of meeting some of the people who purchased these pictures, but do not want to put into print what they thought of the picture business and the picture people as a whole, and to show them that there are some people in this business who are not just in it for every dollar they can get, I agreed to release these pictures for them and get their money back for them.

Since the pictures have been placed on the market, we have received a great many favorable write-ups regarding the picture, "Ashamed of Parents," from exhibitors, newspapers, and people who have seen the picture on the screen.

Although it is quite possible that the productions do not rank among the million dollar class, still the picture, "Ashamed of Parents," carries a message and a thought that is as big as any theme placed upon the screen.

It is quite evident that the writer of the article in your paper was looking at the picture merely from a superficial standpoint, not taking into consideration anything beyond a few sets of scenery and some of the people who portrayed the leading characters, and entirely neglecting the fact that there is something more to the picture than merely so many feet of film.

We trust that when representatives of your paper write on some of our future productions, they will try to use something beside their eyes in writing their reviews.

WARNER BROTHERS,
By H. M. Warner.

(Editor's Note: Mr. Warner refers to a review of "Ashamed of Parents," published in Camera! of September 2.)

DEFENDS THE "SCHOOLS"

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 30.—Editor Camera!—I read your article about motion picture schools. Now I am going to say something directly to the point, as I am very frank always.

A few weeks ago, I answered an ad in a local morning paper for motion picture help. The ad was under the instruction course column, and so naturally I knew it was a school. The man I saw was a gentleman in every respect. He told me facts, pointedly, and did not promise me work of any kind.

I took his course with my eyes open, and every one else who did it, did the same thing. Please give us aspiring motion picture extras some credit for having a little sense. Mr. Editor, I took your article as an insult to the people who are attempting to break into pictures.

At the completion of my course, I was really sent out to work. All told, in three weeks, I worked five different times.

Now, one thing more. On the last set I worked on, I and the girl I was with—she is also a "student"—were complimented on the way we were dressed. Since I am a woman, I naturally notice clothes, and I must say that some of the old-timers, as you call them, looked like a crowd of prehistoric freaks. It was supposed to be an evening gown affair.

I also noticed that very few of the extras had a really good makeup on. They seem to think that if they dab a little grease paint and powder on their faces, why that is all that is necessary, and they don't even trouble to powder their noses. Do you honestly consider that all right?

I was perfectly satisfied with my course, and enjoy the work very much. I am writing this letter, simply because you challenged it, and I know at least fifteen people who took the course and were as completely satisfied with it as myself.

I am giving my name and address, and I privilege you to print it. I will tell anyone of my experience.

BILLIE MILLER.
1034 West Tenth Street.

The Screen Writers' Page - Conducted by William E. Wing

The Rambling Kid

MY mother (here I must explain I am a photoplay, a brain-child; I do not understand how censors let one pass to the screen as one never heard of a brain-child having a father) had spent a number of years studying screen-writing; technique, dramatic situations and everything necessary for the construction of a good photoplay. She breathed the breath of life into her children and was mighty proud of them.

Before my arrival, a number of her children had passed on their construction, but had not acquired that "different" plot to attract a producer. She conceived me out of all the "don'ts" submitted to screen writers, dolled me up in storms and put me through some trying situations, dramatic and realistic, without a gun.

An actress friend, living near Hollywood, kindly offered to sell me. Mother hurried me to her.

My friend was a dainty extra, who knew the game; she took me first to the Fox studio. Mr. J. read my story. He was very much impressed with my future, glad to be permitted to read me. What price did the author ask? My friend contended, all it was worth. Mr. J. thought I was worth giving away. My friend refused and left him.

Next day, he phoned to her to call again, after the second reading, he decided the production cost would be too great. I suppose storms are expensive to produce or prevent.

Two readers of repute OK'd me. My friend had more friends in the film business and lots of faith in me, because she had played in worse plays. Tom Mix rolled his own. Lester Cuneo wanted old time westerns.

It began to look as though I wasn't wanted. Mr. H. of "U" happened along, took me to his office to read, left me on his desk while he attended to some business.

Along came a nice looking girl. I thought, here is where I smile on a movie queen! She looked my envelope over. I judged then she was a scenario reader, and suppose they know a good story by the color of the envelope. She put a two cent stamp on me, sent me home "postage due."

My friend called for her answer; Mr. H. had missed me. The first reader begged my friend's pardon, but she had returned me "as usual," begged her to have me returned as it happened by mistake.

Back I went to Hollywood. I met some awfully clever friends in that mail sack. They were to appeal to producers on their own merits. No high-brow author to boost them over. I wished them luck.

I was not suitable for their production needs at that time, Mr. H. offered this advice:

"The only reliable way to break into the scenario game is to send your scenario in story form to some magazine. It is far easier to get it published in that way, then, submit it to some studio, it is liable to be accepted."

ACHIEVEMENT

By Cristel Hastings Burnham
(Mill Valley, Cal.)

I'd sell my dream tale for a song,
And count it more than gold—
I'd give all else that I possess
To know my story's sold!

Achievement is its own reward,
It sets a goal—a pace—
Without we wander aimlessly,
Slow laggards in the race.

So count Achievement more than wealth,
The thrill worth more than gold—
Those magic words that touch the heart:
"Dear Miss: Your story's SOLD!"

See you later, Mr. H., but not via a magazine.

I have a perfectly refined birth, but mother is changing it not to annoy the censors or embarrass parents when their kiddies ask, "Did the doctor bring the baby in his satchel?"

You will see me sometime on the screen and say I am worth the price. Ask mother; she knows.—NETTIE MORE, Los Gatos, Cal.

Breakfast Food

IN the old days there was a fellow who used to hit from the shoulder when he smote you through his very familiar weapon, the typewriter.

He is one of those who has dropped up a confidential line anent writers and the film. Pioche, Nevada, must be good training quarters, for Arthur Reall, the photoplaywright, still preserves his punch. Listen to him:

"As E. W. S. used to reiterate in his M. P. W. department, 'Keep eternally at it; the stickers will win when the chaffers blow up.'"

"Books will be exhausted, as witness the revivals being foisted upon us now days; stage plays will pass into the discard also, and nothing will be left the reluctant producer but to buy originals, made, measured and meant for motion pictures."

"Productions up to this era have been a good deal like feeding the old horse sawdust; it worked while there was some grain in the sawdust, but now that the boss is trying to make it all sawdust without any substantial food, the old horse is ready to kick in. They can't fool the old horse, Public, much longer by putting green specs on it; and pretty soon the producer will be compelled to buy nourishing food to put in the old nose bag, BOX OFFICE."

"That is what I am waiting for; according to all the rules and instructions, I am not writing stories 'just as good as,' but 'better than' I see on the screen."

"Miss Seig's argument (Camera!) is pointed enough, but it points only one way. If you can't reform an immoral woman, what about the immoral man? East is east, certainly, but it takes more than two to make a crowd, and much as it irks to believe it, women to date have the edge on men as to morals, although they, as a genus, may be flapping."

"Writing for the screen is as much a profession as making hash is a chef d'oeuvre. It's hacking at present. The future author will write his story, then write his continuity, and co-operate with the director in casting and producing, for the era of mind-reading is passing away. To be a successful screen author one must get into the magazines first, for the studios cannot distinguish a story unless it is printed."

"Better than incorporating would be to join the guild, for instance. But to do that you must be a real author; which puts one back in the discard, unless the guild establishes a probationary membership of six months to put over a story. If you can write, you can become a full fledged guildster; if you cannot, you will know it. There have been advertisements, 'There are millions who can write and don't know it.' The truth is, 'There are millions who can't write and don't know it.' And these are the ones who should be admonished to output or shut up."

Oil It Up

ONCE upon a time (Ince, Selig, Lubin, please write), you were told to hold your synopsis down to 250 words in submitting your plot to the studio. The checks you received for same also were held down.

But some very wise person has discovered since, that it is advantageous for the studio to secure from the author not only the plot but all the detailed situation of his story.

The day of the brief synopsis having passed, the cold, pulseless style of unfoldment also has vanished, or should be given the gate.

To get over right one should polish the synopsis up. Apply the oil to smooth it out. Not only set down all the material in your brain but give it force, sincerity and color.

Unique ideas may sell now and then, but the well dressed brain doll stands the greater chance every time.

Build up style.

Letters Home. No. 3

Holly Blvd., Oct. 4, 1922.

Dear Bandoline:

I told you I would rite wen I got my first check for a skenario. And I will do so. Mebbe you can help me some for I have jest begun takin a skenario coarse from an unumversity which gives lesons in fillum writin. They say the plott wich I sent them had "a prologue and retroaction which was undesirable technique." Are they callin me names? Also they say as how my "motivation" is on the blink.

I didn't have no motors or eny other kind of buss in my story but if I had, I would have knowed what to have did. I wasn't grease hound in a garage for nothin. So please wise me up to what the unumversity is doin to my stuff. If they are kiddin I want to no it.

"CRANKSHAFT" JOE.

Pulse of the Studios

For Week Starting Monday, October 9

Professionals are requested to report to Camera! by phone or letter experiences with any company or studio that professes to teach acting, that is operated by non-professional persons, or that does not utilize players in its productions. Camera! intends to keep the Pulse of the Studios accurate in every detail. You can help by reporting any error to Pulse Editor, 595-179.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Starting with this issue, The Pulse of the Studios will list productions only from the time they are actually casting until they are editing.

Camera!'s news columns will carry information of stories purchased, continuities written, directors and stars assigned, and other production preparations. But not until actual casting is ready to be done will the company appear in The Pulse.

When the picture goes to the cutting room it will be listed one time in The Pulse as "Editing." Then it will be removed. When it is complete Camera!'s news columns will state that fact.

The Pulse of the Studios will, therefore, hereafter be a faithful reflection of actual production in the motion picture studios of America.

Contemporary Criticisms

"BROADWAY ROSE" (Metro)

"Mae Murray is at home in 'Broadway Rose' for two reasons; first, she is a dancer, and as such she is always at her best and, second, she is surrounded with gorgeous settings that furnish a picturesque and beautiful background for the stunning costuming of the production in general.

"These Mae Murray productions are always a tribute to the directorial genius of Bob Leonard and, in this instance, 'Broadway Rose' represents about the very best thing he has done. "Photographically, scenically, directorially, it is a gem."

—Moving Picture World.

"Again Mae Murray scores in a colorful and entertaining story of Broadway life. Its principal points of appeal are: it is clean, full of incident and not devoid of humor. Some beautifully colored titles aid effectively in putting the story over.

"'Broadway Rose' has very little to offer in the way of novel plot or original development. There is plenty of material interest in the story, but for the most part it is a vehicle for the exploitation of Miss Murray's dancing rather than her dramatic ability.

"The various points of the story are well brought out by director Leonard, and the picture is beautifully produced and well acted."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"THE ETERNAL FLAME" (First National)

"First and foremost a splendid production has been given the Balzac story, 'La Duchesse de Langeais,' with Norma Talmadge arrayed in many beautiful costumes.

"Extreme care and thought have evidently been given to this adaptation . . . and the result is a film that will live long in the memory of Talmadge fans.

"In the role of the Duchesse de Langeais, first as the faithful and loving wife, and later as the heartless coquette, Norma Talmadge gave one of the finest characterizations of her screen career.

"Conway Tearle made an ideal choice for the role of General de Montriveau, the faithful lover who finally wins the cynical coquette.

"Director Frank Lloyd deserves high praise for his work and there is little to criticize beyond the one point that it is a trifle draggy in the beginning, introducing the characters."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"... Don't overlook Norma Talmadge's masterpiece production, 'The Eternal Flame.' It is first an artistic picture and then an entertainment vehicle that will live for a long, long time . . . the greatest picture ever made by this charming star, who in this particular instance gives as fine a piece of character acting as witnessed in any picture. But the wonderful and outstanding feature is that everything is perfect, acting, direction, photography, lighting, and settings. It is flawless, with every player doing his or her share.

"There is nothing left undone and no opportunity in Honore de Balzac's famous novel has been overlooked.

"The direction of Frank Lloyd is superlative in every particular, while the settings, laid in the period when Louis XVIII ruled supreme, are gorgeously picturesque and historically correct."

—Moving Picture World.

"'Smilin' Through' was a splendid picture. 'The Eternal Flame' is a better one.

"Norma Talmadge attains new emotional heights. Whether as the loyal wife, the court beauty, the coquette, or the nun fleeing from love in a convent, Miss Talmadge is superb.

"The setting . . . sets a new standard for lavish interiors . . . all have been staged with meticulous attention to detail. The subtitles are unusually artistic, being changed ever and anon to relieve monotony. The photography and lighting are perfect.

"This is Frank Lloyd's finest directorial work to date."

—Motion Picture News.

"THE GHOST BREAKER" (Paramount)

"Again Wallace Reid appears in a picture without a racing car . . . It is a spook story, and while it lacks the pep of some of his previous comedies, it will provide good entertainment for the masses, due to the weird and uncanny effects of spooks in a medieval castle clad in white robes and in 'The Ghost Breaker' a picture that will add much lustre to his crowns of stardom. Lacking much of the fast action which marked many of the former pictures of this popular actor, 'The Ghost Breaker' tries hard but fails to get anywhere. Its dragginess is at times illuminated by pleasing situations and good setting effects, in spite of a story which stretches the credulity almost to the breaking point."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"It is a nonchalant Wallace Reid that wanders on and off the sets in this adaptation of the play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard. While he has his work cut out for him he takes it so easy as to make it appear almost farcical at times. Really he doesn't 'bat an eyelid' in protecting himself or the girl, although he is confronted on all sides by desperate men.

"The picture carries a few laughs, but they do not center around the rotund personality of Walter Hiers in blackface. Had he played the part straight he would have encouraged a bit of laughter here and there—but blackface is not his forte. It is his duty to act as Wally's valet. There armor; also to the mystery element and some excellent comedy.

This young man made his debut to the screen in no ordinary way. Elliot Spaulding first starred in the new stereoscopic process of production.

"The scenes in and around the ship, while not vital to the story, allow for the introduction of good, clean comedy on the part of Walter Hiers as the negro valet which kept the audience in continual laughter.

"The picture could be shortened to advantage.

"As the Senorita, Lila Lee has a congenial role which fits her personality. . . . There is something lacking in the star's delineation of the 'Ghost Breaker' and he does not do his best work. Arthur Carewe at times appears camera conscious. The photography and lighting are excellent, and the subtitles are snappy."

—Moving Picture World.

"While it is fairly entertaining it is far from being one of Wallace Reid's best. 'Weird and uncanny effects and spooky story may put it over.

"Able aided by Walter Hiers and Lila Lee, Wallace Reid fails to make are some gaps which need bridging because some scenes release the idea that it is too fantastic—too improbable. Lila Lee is much more a character as the senorita. The settings are excellent."

—Motion Picture News.

"The adaptation of Paul Dickey's and Charles Goddard's stage play offers about a fair film entertainment and will probably go better than that with Wally Reid's admirers. . . . It is a romantic comedy with its principal episodes laid in Spain where most of the comedy is brought out through the hero's efforts to solve the mystery of the haunted castle.

"Director Green has taken a little too long to get into the story.

"The best of the story is the ghost episode in which hero Wally braves the terrors of the haunted castle, assisted by the negro valet, played by the good-natured Walter Hiers. Hiers does good work, but a real negro comedian would have been better.

Green gets the most out of the situations here, and there are some genuine laughs.

"The photography, as usual in Paramount pictures, is excellent and production values up to the usual standard."

—Film Daily.

"REMEMBRANCE" (Goldwyn)

"The author has written a very human story and in transferring it to the screen has succeeded in bringing out the human side of it through a deft combination of humor and pathos that brings laughs, and possibly tears, in a true-to-life fashion. And the comedy sequences should go over big. It has plenty of them and all carry worthwhile laughs.

"Hughes has used much of his psychology in the subtitles that are very well written and interesting.

"Claude Gillingwater is admirable as 'Pop' and Kate Lester splendid as 'Mom,' while the children are nicely played."

—Film Daily.

"The story of a plain old fashioned business man with a family gone foolish over the accumulation of a fortune has many homely touches which make it intensely human.

"'Remembrance' is an interest gripping sequence of rapidly moving events, many of them pathetic but with sufficient number of humorous situations to well sustain the reputation of Mr. Hughes for deft directorial ability in bringing out all there is to the story.

"The bulk of the work is given to Claude Gillingwater . . . this excellent actor is at his best."

—Exhibitors Herald.

"This is the 'poor old father' story . . . There should be a flood of Father Days. The picture deserves that recognition.

"There are high spots of melodrama and intense moments of suspense and sob stuff. There are laughs galore, all of them natural.

"Aside from its melodramatic moments, its heart appeal, the picture gains great strength because it concerns a plain American family—the you-and-me-and-us type of human beings—and gets away from society stuff which overburdens the booking sheets of the day.

"Gillingwater is splendid in the father role and the fact that he has a terrible grouch in the start is not his fault. Patsy Miller as Mab seems made to order for the part and Kate Lester as Mrs. Grout is not the drab, weepy mother usually seen.

"Some unusual soft focus and double exposure stuff adds to this picture."

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Rupert Hughes has made for Goldwyn a picture that will probably be a sure-fire hit with the public in general, but to look at it from a critical standpoint it cannot be said that it is entirely free from faults.

"... For a goodly portion of the film the spectator's emotions are carried along on a surge of feeling engendered by the life-like story . . . The acting of the entire cast is exceptionally good, and the sets, in many instances, are very fine.

"Mr. Hughes has sustained his reputation in this picture, but it cannot go unremarked that he allowed at least one inconsistent touch to creep in. However, this fault can be readily overlooked in the general excellence of the production."

The Little Bird Says:

Hearst is spending near a million in advertising "When Knighthood was in Flower."—N. Y. theaters are sold out eight weeks in advance. How could it go wrong?

Lionel Barrymore was slated to star with Alma Rubens in a Paramount production to be made in Cuba. Someone kicked about who would top in advertising. Anyway, Lionel remained in N. Y. instead of sailing for Cuba.

A lot of people are back from Germany with feature pictures under their wing trying to sell them. Not much success.

Doris Kenyon is singing for phonograph records. A new fad for screen stars.

"The Sidewalks of New York" has just been made. Actors are out looking for the producer and their money.

A courageous company in Chattanooga is about to start production with an imitation Jackie Coogan.

That J. Parker Read will take over the eastern Vitagraph studios to run.

Bob Vignola is going to put "Adam and Eva" upon the screen. Adam will play a part commonly known as "bit," we presume.

Try our school of acting, folks—it's free. Just go to the theater, watch closely what the actors do, then go home and repeat before the looking-glass. You'll have a lot of fun, save a lot of money—and have just as good a chance of getting work in a real picture.

In the Ring With Toreador

Now, if Lon Chaney should open a make-up school, that would be different.

Suppose there's additional charge if you want to learn to kiss and make-up.

Or maybe the kisses are given free—practised by Professor Newman, who taught love culture.

Cheer up, fellow motion picture players! You won't be lonesome much longer! Last week 3804 more persons received diplomas certifying they had paid their $25 and were actors!

One "teacher" says the Actors' Equity Association approves his school. Maybe he pays graduates A. E. A. initiations out of the tuition money.

Only one drawback to those acting schools: When everyone has taken the course, who'll watch 'em act?

Oscar Gugglesnitch, who used to mow our lawn every two weeks, showed up for the first time in a month. He wore a fancy vest and a pint of brillianine and assured us he was now a certified actor.

However, he consented to cut the lawn. He was raising $15 for a dozen stills at "professional rates," he said.

Massachusetts also is yearning for censorship. Another state that has so many evil-minded people that they must be guarded against themselves.

Charity

Wishing to do our bit in aiding a needy municipality which seems to base its existence almost wholly upon "writing the music if you supply the words," we hereby dedicate to New York our seasonable "blue" entitled, "When the Frost is on the Furnace, and the Coal is in the Mine."

Isn't it strange that so many good and pure people, who are so easily shocked, know so much about wickedness when it comes to criticising moving pictures?

Beaned!

Tell me not in mournful number
That my story is the bunk,
When I've wrecked my bean, by thunder!
With the thinks that I have thunk.

Certain film manufacturers again have proven that chasing the dollar is setting the pace that kills.

The P. A.'s Friends

Or, How to Keep the Mailing List Happy and Contented

The Palm Beach (Fla.) Times has been established as an evening paper by F. P. Fildes, owner of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Tropical News.

The Seattle American did not start publication as scheduled September 15.

The South Bend (Ind.) Times has added a rotogravure section.

The Mexia (Tex.) News (evening) is publishing as a daily.

Although frozen heavily upon by the Rockefeller corporation and the Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, for allowing a wildly lunging Standard Oil truck to wreck her roadster, Ruth Wing, editor of Camera!, is back at her desk, slightly off form but still in the ring so far as brow-beating claim agents are concerned.

Miss Wing desires to thank all of her friends for their kindness during her period of painful injury.

MOTHER GOOSE IN HOLLYWOOD

Mary read a little ad,
It's tone was bright as gold;
She took the course in acting
And is now a star, I'm told.

*Simple Simon learned to make-up
Using grease paint and crepe hair;
Said Simple Simon to his teacher:
"Teacher, am I there?"
Teacher said to Simple Simon
"Depends—got much more money?"
Simon hadn't, so they dropped him—
Simon thinks it's funny!*

Sing a song of grafters, pocket full of coin!
Four and twenty pupils in acting lessons
Join!
When the class is over, grafters get some more;
Isn't that a nifty way to make the money
pour?

Frank E. Woods says it only seems week before last that "Spectator" was telling the waiting world that motion pictures were in their infancy. Well, many of them are still squawking.

Metro invited a blind audience to see one of their pictures.
Write your own joke.

Appreciates Hollywood's Welcome

YOU have welcomed us to your film colony with warm and sincere enthusiasm.

Many among you—producers, directors, scenarists, stars—have come to our new home with personal expressions of welcome.

We deeply appreciate this newest indication of your friendship. For we value the constructive help and encouragement you have always given our efforts.

But your welcome has also brought to us with fresh emphasis our responsibility to the great industry to which we are all devoting our lives.

It renews our resolution to serve even more constructively than we have in the past.

Cognizant of the bigness of our task, we attack with new vigor this work of helping, to the fullest extent of our powers, to make your endeavors more successful.

We are glad to be in your midst. We welcome the new opportunities to know you more intimately. For with this more perfect understanding of each others' ambitions and ideals will come closer co-operation, finer results and even greater progress.

Comradeship

"IF JESUS CHRIST were on earth today, He would not only sanction the movies . . . He would act for the clicking camera and probably write scenarios."

The national chaplain of the American Legion, the Rev. Earl Blackman, said that the other day in Wichita, Kansas, addressing the exhibitors in convention there . . .

* * *

Dr. John Rayhill of the Central Congregational church of Topeka, Kansas, shows a motion picture in the Central Congregational church there each Sunday night, and bases his sermon on it. . . .

The former occupant of this pulpit resigned to accept a position in the movies. He is Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, now editor-in-chief of the Christian Herald Motion Picture bureau. . . .

* * *

Out at Burbank the Sacred Films, Inc., is studiously filming the Old Testament.

In New York the other day clergymen sat down side by side with exhibitors and heard plans to exhibit in theaters, every week for a year, pictures of the Holy Land. . . .

Over at Oberammergau producers are seeking the screen rights to the Passion play. . . .

Last Sunday Milton Sills occupied the pulpit of a Wilshire church and gave his theories of religion. . . .

* * *

THE foregoing items have appeared, as news, in various periodicals this week.

They form their own editorial.

They mean one thing:

Trusting comradeship is growing between pulpit and screen. The age of mutual mistrust is over. A new era opens for both.

* * *

These Prizes

CECIL DE MILLE will give $1000 for an original idea for a photoplay.

Well, a good original idea is worth a thousand dollars. Only in the trade we pronounce it "million."

William Fox offered in New York $1000 for a better title than "A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

If Messrs. Fox and DeMille would address offers to freelance screen writers instead of making one leap from the salaried staff slaves to the general public, they might be agreeably surprised by uncovering new screen talent, and at the same time be saved the trouble of examining hundreds of thousands of submitted suggestions.

It's a happy thought. But on mature consideration, probably DeMille's offer is 90 percent a circulation stunt for the Los Angeles Times, and Fox's offer is 99 percent an exploitation stunt for the Lyric theater.

In making this issue of Camera! a Writers' Issue, we aim to tell the world what we think of screen writers, and to let the screen writers understand that we're for them, strong. Many a pair of horn-rimmed glasses adorns a set of hard-working brains, and many a calloused hand is so from pounding ideas into typewriter keys.

The Writers — may their screen credit increase!

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

"The Madonna of Avenue A" (Universal). King Baggott, director; Gladys Walton, star.

Production has been started at the Fine Arts studio by Dick Hatton on "Playing Double," from the pen of J. Stewart Woodhouse. Ethel Shannon plays the leading feminine role, while Phillips Sleeman and Clark Comstock are included in the cast and is being directed by Dick Rush.

Robert Hill has started production on "Wolves of Society," a chapter play starring Jack Mulhall, with Margaret Livingston as the leading woman. Anthony Coldey wrote it. It is being filmed under the supervision of Robert Dillon, editor of the serial scenario department.

Al Rogell productions have taken production quarters at Fine Arts studio where filming of a series of feature stories is scheduled to commence at once. Angela C. Kaufman, philanthropist worker of Los Angeles, has endorsed the company's production plans and has given it financial backing. Al Rogell will direct. Alice Lake has already been engaged to appear in the all-star cast.

Lester Cuneo has started production on "The Devil's Ghost," Western Pictures Exploitation company, under the direction of Henry McCarty, who also wrote the story. Thelma Worth plays the leading feminine role. "The Devil's Ghost" is being supervised by Charles W. Mack, and the production is being filmed at the Fine Arts studio.

The first Frankie Lee production under the direction of Clarence Bricker will be started at the Federal studios as soon as the little star has finished the title role in "The Hero" under Gasnier's direction, at the Louis B. Mayer's studios.

"The Trail Blazers" is being prepared for Art Acord and Edward Laemmle, the "Buffalo Bill" combination. It is a chapter history of the Oregon Trail.

An original story by Rupert Julian, tentatively called "Flesh," will be filmed at Universal city under the direction of the author.

Cutting Up

"White Tiger," with Priscilla Dean; directed by Tod Browning at Universal.

"Tales of the Fish Patrol," with Jack Mulhall and Louise Lorraine; directed by E. Kull at Universal.

"The Grub Stake," by Nell Shipman; star, Nell Shipman; director, Bert Van Tuyle. (Shipman studio.)

"Forsaking All Others," starring Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis, directed by Emile Chautard.

The Regent Film company, which has been organized by the Chaplin studio as an auxiliary company, is preparing a drama in which to star Edna Purviance. This company has no connection with Regent Pictures company, which is preparing to produce "The Drivin' Fool."

Ashley Cooper has finished the part of Lopez in Johnnie Walker's production of "Captain Fly-by-Night," a sequel to the "Mark of Zorro," written by Johnston McCulley.

Neely Edwards' current comedy is "No Fare," directed by William Watson, with Gertrude Olmsted opposite Edwards. The stories are known as the "Nervy Ned" series.

Frankie Lee's first story will be from the pen of Bess Streeter Aldrich. It is an adaptation of her Latest American Magazine story entitled "Last Night When You Kissed Blanche Thompson." Director Bricker has had the story in mind for some time but was only recently able to acquire the picture rights for same.

Hilliard (Fatty) Karr's first picture under the new contract with East Coast productions, has been titled "Weight for Me." It will be under the direction of Bruce Mitchell.

Paul Allen, former D. W. Griffith cameraman, is now Mr. "It" of the John Brunton studios in Miami, Fla. Officially, Paul is only the head cameraman, but that only begins his long list of duties. He co-directs, cuts, edits, titles and is now in New York City helping to collect the money for the product.

Monty Banks, the popular comedy star, will complete the actual "shooting" of his burlesque of Rodolph Valentino's "Blood and Sand," next Monday, his comedy being titled "Flood and Sand." It is possible he will make a trip to New York before starting his next picture.

Complete

"The Scarlet Car," by Richard Harding Davis; adapted by George Randolph Chester; star, Herbert Rawlinson; director, Stuart Paton. (Universal.)

"The Summons," by George Patullo; adapted by George Randolph Chester; star, Frank Mayo; director, Edward Sedgwick. (Universal.)

"The Runaway Girl," adapted by Hugh Hoffman; star, Gladys Walton; director, King Baggott. (Universal.)

"One Exciting Night," at Mamaroneck, N. Y. Directed by D. W. Griffith, photographed by H. Sartev. For release by United Artists.

"Aching Hearts," at Betzwood, Pa. Directed by Frank N. Seltzer. Lee Kohlmar, Richard Farrell, James Thomas, Betty Howe, Arthur Ashley in cast.

Christie has finished his European comedy of life in Graustark called "Choose Your Weapons," featuring Bobby Vernon.

Al Herman, Century comedy director, has just finished a domestic serio-comedy in which Lee Moran is to be starred. Betty Mae and Blanche Payson are important members of the cast.

Marcel Perez, director for Sanford Productions, completed a new two-reel comedy this week at the Fine Arts studios.

Charles R. Seeling, having completed the filming of "The Purple Dawn," a seven-reel melodrama written by himself, will leave Fine Arts studio for New York shortly to stage an official trade showing of his production.

Truth About the Schools

OF 19 motion picture "employment" want ads in last Sunday's papers, five led directly or indirectly to room 311 in the Grosse building, Sixth and Spring street. This is the private office of Michael J. Lynch, listed in the city directory as a cameraman, living at 1138 Manzanite street, but boasting of having directed and produced his own pictures.

Lynch is a dapper, fast-talking young man of about 27.

To meet Lynch casually, one wouldn't suspect that he is the magnate at the head of the Hollywood Film company (124 West Sixth street, room 311), the Apollo Film company, (124 West Sixth street, room 319), the Classic Film Actors agency, (124 West Sixth street, room 310), the Los Angeles Academy of Dramatic Art, (124 West Sixth street, rooms 310, 311, 319, 320), and the Aywon studio, a "branch office" (734 South Olive street)—and has producing facilities at the Caswell studio as well.

But from testimony of newspaper advertisements, business cards, and persons who have paid $15 for his courses in acting and make-up, he is the mogul who directs these activities.

The Hollywood Film Company

Just now the Hollywood Film company seems to be occupying many of Lynch's waking hours.

As the newest of his activities, therefore presumably requiring the most promotion, three advertisements were run under "Employment Agencies" in Sunday's papers. Two of them read:

BIG MOTION PICTURE start. Want limited number well-dressed men, women. All ages. Long contract if qualified.

The third discloses that:

SCREEN aspirants desiring entree into moving pictures, will be given wonderful opportunity to be associated with large producing company starting. Only well-dressed, cultured people considered.

A few weeks ago ads from "124 West Sixth street, suite 311" called for "inexperienced people." No more do they so state in the ad.

The "long contract" is an innovation, however, that came into being this month with the "Hollywood Film company." One of the establishment's former names was the Los Angeles Academy of Dramatic Art—in fact some of the "academy's" business and membership cards are still on hand. They are being used up as rapidly as possible.

The contract, as per ad, is contingent—"if qualified," it says.

One can easily become qualified by stepping down the hall to 319, where the Apollo Film company will disgorge six lessons in make-up and acting for the paltry sum of $15—or more, if possible.

The Apollo Film Company

With the lessons, too, one receives a card entitling one to "professional rates" at a well-known theatrical make-up shop and at a less-known photographer's.

Possession of the card doesn't tilt make-up prices, but at the photographers it enables one to receive a dozen 8x10 prints for $12, two dozen for $30. (In fact, rates have a fantastic scale at this photographers; his regular, advertised price is 25 professional pictures for $7.50)! Incidentally, pupils say they have Mr. Lynch's assurance that they must patronize this particular lens artist—no other will do.

While Lynch holds his make-up classes in 319 Grosse building, his lessons in acting are given at the Caswell studio each Sunday.

"I went twice to the Caswell studio for the proposed acting lessons, but nothing was shown but mere stupidity," Michael R. Ross informs Camera!

Mr. Lynch has called at Camera! office several times in the past few days to assure us that he does not promise employment to anyone. In fact, he discourages prospective pupils. ($15 for six lessons possibly would discourage one!—Editor). But he considers that anyone who can't be dissuaded from learning to make-up and to act, should be permitted to learn.

Furthermore, over 60 of his pupils have actually worked in pictures—he'll submit names for inspection.

(One of Lynch's graduates estimates that he teaches 100 to 125 persons every two weeks. Lynch assures us that he has only three weekly classes of 12 persons each. Lynch's figures give a rate of 1872 "graduate actors" a year. Of these, 60 actually worked!)

Lynch doesn't promise work to those who take his course, he asserts.

But a few weeks ago a Camera! representative called, incognito, at the Classic Film Actors agency and met a Mr. Kahn, who assured her she was the right type for straight character and mentioned a big set coming up at United studio. He urged her to join the class for make-up immediately. She would be assured four days a week at from $7.50 to $10.

Bud Harris, a young man in sweater and puttees in charge of the Aywon studio, "branch office" of the Classic, at 734 South Olive street, also told Camera! representation that if she took the Classic course in make-up he would probably be able to give her a job the following week at United.

A young man who answered a blind ad and was sent to see Lynch, reports that Lynch guaranteed him work that would soon pay for the cost of his course in make-up and acting.

A young matron informs Camera! she was promised work if she took the Apollo Film company course, but got none.

The Classic Film Actors Agency

Ivan Kahn, manager and casting director of this agency, tells Camera! the agency has no connection with any school, and is actually supplying extra talent for Hamilton-White comedies and other productions.

Kahn ran the Classic agency in the fall of 1921 and cast extra persons for such pictures as "Trouble," "The Infidel," "Salome," and the courtroom scenes of "The Prisoner of Zenda," he declares.

Last spring he sold out to M. J. Lynch of the Apollo Film company and went to work for a distributing company in a minor position. September 1 he took back the agency from Lynch and is paying for it on terms, he states.

He registers "absolutely no students." Of course, Lynch is legally owner of the agency until it's paid for.

FOR the information of readers, Camera! herewith lists schools of motion picture acting and make-up advertising in Los Angeles papers. Experiences of Camera! operatives at these schools will be told each week.

Letters are invited from any reader who has had experience with these enterprises.

SCRIPTURE FILMS, Inc., 921 Loew's State theater building. Offers contract in return for investment. Requires make-up course from R. B. Wilcox, 643 South Olive street.

FILM EXCHANGE, 643 South Olive street. R. B. Wilcox wants types, experience unnecessary; sends them to Scripture Films, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD FILM COMPANY, 311 Grosse building. M. J. Lynch offers contract to persons qualifying.

APOLLO FILM COMPANY, 319 Grosse building. M. J. Lynch conducts classes in make-up and acting; $15 for 6 lessons.

AWYON STUDIO, 734 Olive street. "Branch" of Classic Film Actors' Agency; sends pupils to Apollo Film Company.

LOS ANGELES ACADEMY OF DRAMATIC ART. Same as Apollo Film Company.

ELITE PRODUCTIONS, 4811 Fountain avenue (Brentwood studio). Partnership venture in which investors are entitled to screen test and possible work in picture.

BOYLE HEIGHTS STUDIO, 753 Boyle avenue; instruction fee, guarantees work when production is made.

JACK C. O'BRIEN PRODUCTIONS, 410 Court street, wants new types, experience unnecessary, gives lessons. Has agents at room 1004, 405 South Hill street, and room 215, 321 Third street.

FASHION INDUSTRIAL FILM COMPANY, 5444 Hollywood boulevard (Assistant Directors' association rooms); Max Asher offers tuition in acting and make-up, work at studios without pay required in training.

HARRY GAYLORD PRODUCTIONS, Santa Monica and Bronson avenues (Caswell studio); want persons to invest, take instruction, and act. Works with "agency" at 646 San Fernando building.

RICHARD THOMAS PRODUCTIONS, 5821 Santa Monica boulevard, (Berwillia studio), wants actors to invest in units of stock, paid back with interest on release of each picture.

NORCROSS STUDIO, 5624 Virginia avenue, teaches picture acting.

Where to Find People You Know

Scott Sidney has begun filming Christie's satire, "Hazel From Hollywood," with Dorothy Devore in the leading role of Hazel, corn-fed movie queen from Muscatine. With Dorothy Devore in the picture are Henry Murdock, also Lincoln Plumer, Ward Caulfield and others.

Harry Sweet has returned to Century comedies and will be seen in the Lee Moran picture, "The Boarder."

Stuart Holmes has been selected to play in Katherine MacDonald's new picture, "The Scarlet Lily."

Madge Bellamy has been selected to play the leading feminine role in the new Tom Forman production, "Are You a Failure?"

Tyrone Brereton is playing Jacob in three pictures for Sacred Films, Inc., not Joe Allen, as erroneously reported. Joe Allen plays Esau in the picture, "Jacob and Esau."

Kate Lester has been placed under contract by the Goldwyn Pictures corporation.

Neal Hart, having completed his first series of eight five-reel western pictures, for William Steiner productions, will take a brief rest of about three weeks before starting a second new series for the same firm.

St. Elmo Boyce, formerly with Maurice Tourneur at Ince studio as cameraman, is now at R-C studio with Malcolm St. Clair.

Theodore Kosloff is playing the second male lead in C. B. DeMille's new production, not yet titled. Elliott Dexter is cast for the leading male role.

Cullen Landis will play Alan in Fred Niblo's production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair."

Nola Luxford, that delightful English actress who supported Lawson Butt in "The Flying Dutchman," has been engaged to play in his next picture which will be made at Gerson studio in San Francisco. Miss Luxford recently finished in "The Man of Wrath" at Federal studio. She expects to leave for San Francisco in about three weeks.

George Archainbaud is directing "The Power of a Lie," for Universal, having been released for one picture by Selznick. Charles Stumar is his cameraman. The continuity is by Charles Kenyon. The picture has an all-star cast.

Vincent Coleman and Doris Kenyon have deserted the screen for a few months. They are now playing the leading roles in the William A. Brady stage production, "Up the Ladder."

Frederick Stowers and a company of 100 people are on location at Piru, Cal., shooting scenes for "The Hand-Me-Down." An all-star cast includes Ethel Grey Terry, Zasu Pitts, Vera Daniels, Noah Beery, Russell Simpson, John Harron, Edward M. Kimball, and Snitz Edwards.

ALONG THE RIALTO

George Ade is active in the filming of his story, "Back Home and Broke," in which Thomas Meighan and Leatrice Joy will star.

Richard Barthelmess has finished his latest picture, "Fury." Dorothy Gish is co-starring with him in this production.

The three Keatons—Buster and his parents, are united in "The Electric House," being produced by First National.

"Merton of the Movies," the Harry Leon Wilson story dramatized by Kaufman and Connelly, will have a "picture girl," for the part of Beulah Baxter. She is Gladys Feldman.

Roy Neil, former Goldwyn and Famous Players director, will sail for Italy soon to do a series of four pictures. He will take an American cast.

Jack Okay, Brunton director, will leave within a few days for a short visit to Hollywood and thence to Miami to make their next feature, "The Fugitive."

Jack O'Neill has just returned from London where he has been producing the Bert Fassio comedies for the Eprograph company.

RAYMOND MCKEE.

Jean Hersholt, now enacting the role of Prince Otto in support of Mae Murray in "Coronation," may play a second time with Mary Pickford, he being favored for a prominent part in "Dorothy of Haddon Hall."

Adolphe Menjou is playing with William deMille in "Paths of Glory." His role is that of a wealthy portrait painter.

Baby Muriel McCormac has finished at Lasky's where she has been playing in "The Daughter of Luxury" under the direction of Paul Powell. She has now been engaged by Security productions at Brentwood studio to play in "Another Man's Shoes."

Hal Sintzenich (called Snitz), photographer of "Over the Hill," etc., is back from Bermuda, where he cranked on "The Elusive Flamingo," for Lady Mackenzie of African lion hunting fame.

Jack Hoxie has gone up to Hemet where they are staging a big rodeo. Robert Bradbury is filming the scenes which he intends to embody in Jack's next story, which will start production on their return from Hemet.

Harry Pringle is working with Baby Peggy at the Century studios.

"Fatty" Karr is still tied up with Al St. John on his latest feature for Fox. As soon as St. John is finished, Karr will start "Weight for Me."

Betty Blythe has started work on her second Whitman Bennett production, "The Darling of the Rich." In her support will be Montague Love, Gladys Leslie, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Gerard and Jane Jennings.

William Strauss is producing "The House of Solomon."

Jack Mintz has written a song, "Still at Home." Besides being a composer, Mintz is a gag writer.

William A. Crinley has been appointed production manager of Irving Cummings productions. Edward H. Hayden will officiate as business manager, while Charles Kerr will act as art director. All the Irving Cummings productions will be edited by Hal Kern.

Irene Rich has been cast for one of the leading feminine roles in "Michael O'Halloran," the first of a series of adaptations of her popular novels which are being produced by Gene Stratton Porter at the Thomas H. Ince studios.

Jack Livingston has been signed for one of the principal roles in the first Albert Rogell production which is to enter filming this week at the Fine Arts studios.

Joe Allen plays the part of Esau, the Hairy Man, in the Sacred Films which are under production at the Burbank studios.

Mal St. Clair has started production on a series of H. C. Witmer stories similar to the Leather Pusher series by the same author. George O'Hara will star in these productions.

Chris Martin plays the stellar role in "Tepee Love," an Indian romance.

Kathleen Key, who played the leading feminine role in Ferdinand Earle's production of "The Rubaiyat," is now playing opposite Edward Everett Horton in Jess Robbins' latest production for Vitagraph, "Trouble Buster." The picture is being made at the Fine Arts studios.

Mary Alden has achieved stardom. United Artists corporation is starring her in "A Woman's Woman," adapted from the Nalbro Bartley story in the Saturday Evening Post. She is now at San Juan, Porto Rico, working in another production.

Les Manter is assisting Lambert Hillyer at the Hollywood studios for the Frank R. Adams production company.

George Rigas has been cast in "The Rip Tide," which is being produced by Mrs. A. B. Maescher, and directed by Jack Pratt at the Hollywood studios.

Henry Lehrman will direct the Carter De Havens at the R-C studios in their next story.

Edward (Hoot) Gibson is being directed by William Worthington at the Big U.

Floyce Brown, Vera Alden and Dorothy Vernon have been working for the Hall Room Boys comedy company at their studios.

Jack Henderson recently played a Chinaman for the Sanford productions, with Marcel Perez directing. George D. Crocker is cameraman, with Alexander Alt assistant director.

Cliff Saume will be the right hand for Henry Lehrman, when the latter starts to direct Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven at the R-C studios.

Writers' Writings

Don't "Knock"!

By Frank E. Woods

IF you believe everything that you read in the newspapers and magazines, you will understand that the motion picture art or industry is in a terrible way. Everything is wrong. The stories are rehashes or inane, the picture incidents are shocking or uninteresting, the thrills are illogical or stereotyped. In short, the motion picture is ceasing to progress and the devil generally is to pay.

Let us inquire a little bit and try to discover if there is any truth in the general indictment.

There are about eight hundred picture plays, of five reels or longer, produced in the United States every year. How many of these have exceptional merit? Any reader of the Camera! will be able to recall readily from a list of a year's production at least fifty pictures which are entitled to and have received from the public general commendation. At first thought that fifty exceptionally well written and produced stories out of eight hundred would seem to be a small percentage.

Let us, however, compare this relative number to the product of the stage and the printing press. I have no statistics that I can quote, but it is safe to assume there are thousands of novels and short stories published every year. Of these thousands how many can be reckoned as exceptional or as showing advancement in literature? Are there any more than fifty in a year's product?

Take the stage. The number of new plays produced in a year in all parts of the country will number several hundred. I have not the figures available, but the number must be at least five hundred. Out of this product, how many great plays so recognized by the public are there that survive? Are there twenty-five? I doubt it.

It must, therefore, be obvious that the fifty exceptional motion picture productions represent fully as high an average of excellence as are found in the contemporary stage plays or published fiction. The difference is this, that when we judge literature we do not judge it by the mass of junk published in various forms and found scattered on the newsstands and book-store shelves, but we judge it by the exceptional books—the best sellers, numbering usually a dozen or more. In the same way we judge the stage by the successes and not by the failures. But in the pictures, the average critic invariably passes judgment on the entire product of the motion picture profession by reference only to the very poorest examples.

My contention is that the motion picture is progressing and is continuing to develop greater art quality and finer sense of story telling. This is being brought about by the greater interest that is being taken in the cinema as a medium of expression by authors who are becoming trained in the new profession.

It is to the creative author that the motion picture must look for its future development, and this is becoming more manifest year by year. Too much must not be expected in a brief period of time, but to those who consider the question impartially it must be evident that the right kind of progress is being made.

Therefore, let us not knock, let us boost.

THEY FIXED IT UP

1.
Methought my script was passing fair,
I named it "Love's Dilemma."
The studio gave me a scare
By calling it, "Oh Henna!"

2.
My lovers moved in sunlight warm,
He wooed a maiden shy.
They made it in a raging storm,
Boob—maiden—kitchen—pie!

3.
My villain was a haughty man,
Who threatened lof-tilee.
The guy who played it was a "ham,"
Who cried, "By gosh!" and "Gee!"

4.
Then came my climax, purged and pure,
A thing of strength, of might.
Alas! The hero proved demure,
He kissed her HAND—Good night!

The "Original" Sin

By Carey Wilson

(Associate editor of the Goldwyn scenario department and author of "Passions of the Sea.")

EXPERIENCE of the last two years in editorial work, prompts me to feel that the great fault of the writer of original screen stories is that he does not know "pictures." The "original" sin is that the average screen writer does NOT write what study and observation could easily tell him is the story a producer will buy, but rather squanders his inspiration and energy on a story he thinks the producer should buy.

I have never seen a reputable motion picture production, no matter how badly produced, but that I could discern the thing or things about that story which made the producer believe it was desirable, or rather purchasable, which is the important thing to the author. Some angle, theme, situation, or character development always stands out plainly as the potentiality which brought its author a check.

As a rule, writers do not study this—do not attempt to see and satisfy the comparatively obvious demands of the producer.

In considering original stories submitted to me editorially, I find practically none over which I hesitate. Almost every original I read instantly classifies itself—either IT IS—or IT ISN'T; either there is an instantly perceptible slant which causes me mentally to begin a translation of the author's words into imaginary scenes,— or there isn't, in which latter case the story is generally impossible.

The market for originals always should be good. Frequently the effort required to interpret a novel or play into screen matter more than offsets the prestige of that publication or play, unless, of course, it should be a national success.

It would seem that the obvious and comparatively simple task of the original writer is to take advantage of producers' susceptibility to pure screen material by writing only screen material,—by studying successful motion picture productions and from them formulating in his own mind a set of regulations to which, without limiting his imagination or cramping his appetite for originality, he shall conform for the sake of salability.

Hurrah For Us!

By Rob Wagner

OF COURSE it stands to reason the WRITER is the most important functionary in the making of a motion picture. Other silly people will dispute this obvious truth, the actor saying: "What would they do without me?" the cameraman snorting: "Hell, I MAKE the picture," the light-hound insisting that because of his cunning he "makes a plate of prunes look like a star," and then the cutter: "50,000 feet of junk, but see what I got out of it." But after all, what would any of them do without the writer! The actor would have nothing to act, the cameraman nothing to shoot, the hound would have nothing to light, and the cutter nothing to mutilate. So there you are; the argument is unanswerable.

There was a time when producers believed it would be the thing to train writers for the screen, so that their works would not have to be translated by scenario hounds of lesser ability. This promised well, for it insured fresh material by professional story-tellers, addressed directly to the needs of the screen. But our eastern salesmen (who really determine our policies) turned down the idea. They claimed that though they wanted good stories, the pictures were sold largely before they were seen; hence they must have pre-release "talking points," and it was much easier to sell a picture from published material.

Thus it was that the producers no sooner lured the writers out to Hollywood than they turned right around and shoed them back again to write their stories first for the magazines.

Some day the industry will outgrow its adolescence, with its growing pains and changing voice; then it will know what it really wants,—and it will be for more and better writers who can write directly for the screen.

But even now if you do not believe that the writer is the most important person in the industry, ask any member of the Screen Writers' guild, or lunch some day at the Writers' club.

Exaggeration in Pictures

By Finis Fox

HAVE you noticed the widespread tendency to exaggerate everything in pictures—to substitute artificiality for reality, simulation for emotion, sensationalism for drama?

Has it struck you how often the human things that people do and say are sacrificed for stage tricks, mechanical effects and pictorial moonmist?

Have you observed that truly great dramatic situations are oftentimes perverted, distorted, mutilated, butchered, in order to inject forced laughs, exaggerated sob stuff, and hokum thrills?

Is it true that the public is so jaded, so overfed, so overstimulated, that it demands chocolate eclair dramas and cream puff concoctions?

Does the public really want theatrical claptrap and dramatic bunk dolled up with lavish sets, gorgeous gowns and magnificent photography? Or does it merely acquiesce in lieu of something better?

Is the future of the screen secure when pictures are made not to make people think and feel, but merely to make them gasp?

FOUR YEARS AGO IN HOLLYWOOD

(From Camera! of October 20, 1918)

Harold Lockwood died yesterday of pneumonia.

Word of Lawrence Peyton's death in Flanders received by his wife and mother.

Frank Lloyd, Bryant Washburn, Lottie Pickford and Tom Mix are on the sick list.

Vitagraph is closing until November 4.

It is rumored that Gloria Swanson will affiliate with Lasky.

Bennie Ziedman, ill in New York, is reported improved.

Bill Hart is on his way west. In Philadelphia he sold $150,000 worth of Liberty bonds at one meeting.

Metro studio closed yesterday for one month. Bert Lytell will go to his ranch in Napa county. Mary Allison to the mountains.

Joe Dark Cloud, model for Remington's paintings and three years actor with Griffith at Biograph, died last Saturday. At 59 he played juvenile lead with Mary Pickford in "The Wildwood Flute."

Weekly occurrence: Bobby Harron trimmed Al Ray at handball at L. A. A. C.

The advisory board of motion picture directors, Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, wants stories to speed up shipyard labor and other government work.

Clarence Burton is with Donald Crisp at Lasky, working in the Bryant Washburn picture, "Venus From the East."

The Lasky Home Guards drill each Wednesday night. The officers are C. B. De Mille, captain; Henry Woodard, first lieutenant, and James Neill, second lieutenant.

Mr. and Mrs. Tod Browning entertained a few friends informally last Saturday at dinner. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Price, Mrs. W. A. S. Douglas and Mrs. Morgan.

Mrs. Harry A. Hayes entertained the Marconi club Thursday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Woods.

Dustin Farnum gave a luncheon on his yacht Daphne Sunday.

Pauline Curley of Brentwood Film company is in receipt of flattering poetry from a Michigan fan.

From a suite of three offices three months ago, the Palmer Photoplay corporation has grown into twelve offices in the I. W. Hellman building, with 20 employees.

William Lord Wright will have charge of publicity and screen stories for Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum at Brunton.

John Gilbert is beardless once more.

Fritzi Brunette hasn't completed her photoplay at the U which Douglas Gerrard is directing.

The rumor that Charlie and Sydney Chaplin have quarrelled is wrong. Syd Chaplin went east in behalf of "Shoulder Arms," to be released October 21. He also arranged for two companies at the Chaplin studio.

GAGS

By Jack Mintz

You may not remember the story of Adam and Eve—BUT the gag about the fig leaf—that's different!

You may not recall the details of the burning of Rome—BUT the gag of Nero playing the fiddle—that's different!

You couldn't recount the life history of Solomon—BUT the gag about his thousand wives—

You couldn't tell much about Columbus' long years—BUT his gag of discovering America—

You have forgotten long ago in what story it was used—BUT you remember the gag of the thrown custard pie!

Shakespeare says "The Play's the Thing!" But it takes a GAG to put the "thing" over!

Subtitle Subtlety

By Eugene A. Vogt

THE main title of this wheeze, it may be noted by those possessed of the proper modicum of acumen—Pete, get me that dictionary!—is a play on words. Whether one plays the piano or the human soul one should ever strive for harmony.

The move palaces have been built for the purpose of showing pictures, not for reading rooms. Folks go there to see a photoplay, not the never so artistic array of the redundant articulator. Therefore, it behooves the title writer to condense himself, say it quick and be sure to be saying something while he is saying it.

We appreciate the difficulties, but whenever we want to give an anxious public the full blast of my extensive and varied vocabulary, we hire a hall and turn on the lights. But whenever we shine on the screen in a darkened house, we try to keep my stuff down to an average of less than twelve words in order to give the hardworking director and actor some space to move around in.

We thank you!

The Story and the Star

IT is a patent truth that no star can succeed without good screen stories.

Yet, to date, no successful actor or actress has been known to declare or admit that screen writers have been great factors in establishing those successes.

Until a short time ago photoplay writers were the under dogs, the tolerated. Strong words, but true nevertheless.

So far as distinctive recognition was concerned, there was no such word in the limited studio vocabulary.

First the brand was all of it. Then the star nailed the honors. A few directors edged in and became recognized by the press agent, through courtesy of the management.

But then, as now, the going production first owed its success to the writer.

The proof of the pudding has been in the eating. No actor or actress ever has survived a series of weak story pictures, no matter how brilliantly he or she glimmered in the film firmament.

On the other hand, really big stories have created stars at first appearance in such roles.

* * *

THE "star system" has had much to do with the bug which now is biting the established manufacturer, as well as some late comers.

The average star, as a picker of stories, is about as successful as the average director who "writes his own." In a great majority of cases the star-picked tale causes grief at the box office.

And the honest manufacturer will say it himself, if in a frank mood. He has done more than that; he has exclaimed it, many times.

The exceptions to the rule—stars of brain and thorough understanding in addition to histrionic ability, fully realize the value of the story. They know how vital it is to them as represented by future reputation and remuneration.

But the selfish luminary, generally with nothing more in the old bean than such edifying thoughts as—

"How many closeups?"

"Am I in every scene?"

"Are the other roles toned down far enough?"

"Is my own role popular all the time throughout the picture?"

—that is the star whose selection is not in accord, many times, with either studio reader, editor, director or manager.

And this explains in no small measure, to puzzled writers, reasons for rejections of very very good stories which should be played.

ASTOUNDS SCIENCE

A very surprising case arose in our midst this week when a writer of originals refused and would not consent to have his name on the screen along with the production which he wrote. He is now under observation at the chiropractic institute of cementology, along with the fellow who started a company without a star.

It Happened To Me

Here are a few gleanings from the Writers' Club, idly picked up here and there among the fortunes and fates of stories rejected and sold. Contributors to this hodge-podge are not named because—most of it has happened to us all.

* * *

I WAS paid for the continuity all right but when I saw the production upon the screen, friends had to conduct me home. I learned afterwards that the assistant director had re-written the adaptation. The director responsible declared it was his "system."

* * *

"I fell for an advertisement asking western stories for an independent. My story, with a theme, came back. It might have been punk. But other regulars met the same fate. The star came out with a bunch of the cheapest, most trite, no-plot, hokum filled stories that ever cheapened the screen. Writers should investigate before they waste their time."

* * *

"I thought I had a good scenario and my agent offered it everywhere for a year before landing it. It made money and plenty of it. Reports from various studios admitted that it was 'good,' 'strong,' 'big,' but none were doing that kind or else they had no units which could play it. If they all spoke the truth, they were merchants who admitted the article in question would clean up, but they couldn't put in a new counter to show the goods. Aren't movies just grand?"

* * *

"If they like your idea and order a complete synopsis, get a check for at least $200 first. It will save you a lot of work for nothing, many times. If a company is honest in its desire for that particular plot, it will not object to a partial payment. Manager, director and star hooked me on one and I haven't sold the darn thing yet."

* * *

"I would rather write three program

When Comedy Weeps

IN the wholesale attack upon present-day productions, anent the subject of "What's the matter with the pictures?" assailants seem to center upon ignorance and greed as reasons. But none have waded through the mass of things to the very important subject of comedy fillers.

How long must the public, when going to witness features, be assailed by short-reel subjects foisted upon these helpless millions of patrons under the counterfeit title of "comedies?"

There are good comedies, but the ratio of genuine laugh-makers is so small as to be invisible most of the time.

The dominant reason is that successful writers will not waste their time in trying to fill the most needy demand of the entire market.

Genuinely humorous plots of the comedy class stand less show of sale than any other class of contributions to the screen. The average comedy (?) promulgator does not seem to want actual stories or plots behind his reel or two of action.

He is out for so-called "gags," and these, for the greater part, are extracted from the brains of "the company," from director, boss, assistants—anyone with a "gag" to suggest. They "build" as they go along, according to their own statements. So long as an endless array of jazz and slapstick eats up the footage, most of it very ancient, all hands seem satisfied.

The second reason is that the majority of companies will not pay adequate prices, when an occasional contribution does suit.

Therefore the public will continue to suffer until the majority of present-day "comedy" producers fail from their own short-sightedness.

stories than a special for some individual star who selects his or her own stories. It is much easier to sell the so-called program story to a second party, if the first studio turns it down."

* * *

"Deliver me from the encouraging editor who has no authority to make the decision. One of them used up a week of my time in September."

* * *

"Why doesn't the Screen Writers' guild get up a list of managements which are not only safe to deal with, but who mean what they say? Some of these birds evidently think that writers like to be kidded along. My optics are just opened to that kind."

* * *

"There ought to be a law against the fellow who has you develop a story and then offer you about half price for it. He represents the kind that figure that the writer may accept his pittance rather than lose the sale."

* * *

"A fellow last week asked me if I wanted to 'pick up' $50. When asked the answer, he told me he wanted a feature titled. Said I could slap it out quickly. Is the season closed for this kind?"

Contemporary Criticisms

"UNDER TWO FLAGS" (Universal)

"Director Tod Browning has made an excellent production.

"The role of the girl, Cigarette, provides Priscilla Dean with one of the best opportunities of her screen career and she gives a fine portrayal, bringing to the part the spontaneity and quickly changing moods of the child of the desert as created by the author. Effective, too, in the contrasting role of the slow-moving, deliberate English soldier is James Kirkwood. Stuart Holmes is well cast as the villainous colonel, and Ethel Grey Terry portrays with dignity and charm the role of the English Princess, and John Davidson gives a good performance as the suave and polished but deceitful Sheik.

"Pictorially, the production is attractive."—Moving Picture World.

"There is no lack of action and spectacular situations in this adaptation of Ouida's well known novel. Cigarette's ride across the desert . . . and the dash of the Gallic cavalry . . . are thrilling in the extreme, a veritable medley of melodramatic fury. The story diverges considerably from the original plot and is a trifle vague in spots. . . . The director has shown considerable skill in his grouping and handling of the cast.

"The desert scenes are remarkably well filmed and the Oriental atmosphere is convincing. The continuity holds fairly well together and fast action prevails."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"It is a capital melodramatic entertainment, following the story closely without giving too much tiresome details of soldier life in and around a French military camp. The love interest is subservient to the more melodramatic dash and clatter of the piece, although it has a beautiful and satisfying climax.

"Some of the night scenes are very well done, and the photography is perfect in every way."—Exhibitors Herald.

"Priscilla Dean, whose zest and enthusiasm for playing a part for all it is worth, makes not only her performance conspicuously successful but enhances the play in the bargain. . . . it is a delight to watch her put color in her scenes."—Motion Picture News.

"Tod Browning's production contains some fine action, but it is all in the last reel, too late to save the five or six slow moving reels that precede it. Otherwise his presentation is a good one. It contains fine bits of pictorial appeal."—Film Daily.

"There is a lesson in this stark drama and it grips you during its unfoldment. Yet there are scenes which are unusually long drawn out. But take notice of the photography—the play of lights upon the silhouetted dericks, the atmosphere of opulence in the interiors, and the artistic scheme to make it genuine."—Motion Picture News.

"PINK GODS" (Paramount)

"This picture is far too long for the material involved. The climax particularly could be speeded up and at the same time create a better suspense. . . . it is so obvious what is going to happen that it would be a whole lot better to get it over quickly.

"Stanlaws presents a well made picture, and there are the usual number of interesting shots, both interior and exterior.

"Cynthia Stockley's story is a trifle too far-fetched for most minds to accept as film entertainment. It presents a possibly interesting bit of psychology but highly implausible."—Film Daily.

"The theme gives ample scope for settings of magnitude as well as lavishness, and the director has taken full advantage of both opportunities."—Moving Picture World.

"'Pink Gods,' adapted from Cynthia Stockley's novel, 'Pink Gods and Blue Demons,' is one of the most compelling photodramas that has recently been shown. The story is brimful of situations that grip and hold the audience spellbound. Penrhyn Stanlaws has spent every effort in building up the screen version, and the whole thing has been handled with such finesse that is seldom put into a feature of this length.

"Bebe Daniels gives a fine performance. Anna Q. Nilsson is attractive and graceful. James Kirkwood is the dominant figure in the picture and carries his role through with force and feeling. Raymond Hatton in the latter part of the picture does a difficult role very capably."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES" (F. B. O.)

"The true atmosphere of one of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous Sherlock Holmes' stories is found in its picturization . . . by Director Maurice Elvey.

"The cast does excellent work, with Eille Norwood as the great detective, Herbert Willis as Doctor Watson, and Frederick Raynham as the butler, excellent. The adaptation has been cleverly done, so as to preserve the mystery until the end, and yet not leave the spectator bewildered by the transitions of the plot."—Moving Picture World.

"This is a thoroughly good picture, well directed, capably acted, and carrying the very atmosphere of the moors which play so large a part in the Conan Doyle story. The suspense that is so necessary to the mystery plot is well maintained.

"The cast is excellent. Norwood, as the great detective, gives a natural and convincing performance, staying carefully away from the 'stagey' work which so many actors and directors seem to think indispensable to the screen sleuth. His support is first rate, the characters of Doctor Watson and Osborne being especially well done."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"They have turned out a film calculated to make anyone sit up and take notice. If they have faltered it is in allowing too many captions to interrupt the sequences—captions which explain facts which are immediately followed by the illustrations. Eliminate many of these subtitles and the picture would carry much more mystery. Yet it carries suspense.

"The lighting is faulty in the interiors. The exteriors are misty and, therefore, correct for such a story and its locale. Eille Norwood makes a good Holmes. He seems to step out of the pages of the story."—Motion Picture News.

"Hope"

QUITE overlooked and hidden away on a program with a "headliner" is "Hope," an English made film with Mary Astor. This little three-reel gem of beautiful simplicity is an artistic feast. The direction is natural and the plot straightforward and uncomplicated.

Mary Astor yields her talent to the direction and her beauty befits her role.

The photography, however, is the outstanding feature. Though he is not credited on the screen the photographer has made paintings of his sets, portraits of his actors.

More subjects of this type will indeed place motion pictures in the art galleries.

"Pink Gods"

AGAIN Lasky had applied its unit system to a novel and turned out a picture innocent of a story. "Pink Gods" was first put through the adaptation hands of Sonya Levien and J. E. Nash. Then it was scenarized by Ewart Adamson, so there is much doubt just how much of Cynthia Stockley's novel was left after the process of milling was over. However, we cherish a kindly thought for the writer who allowed one of the leading women to die at the final scene. It could not be called an unhappy ending. It was an extremely happy thought that caused her timely demise, for her struggles to portray dramatic action were suffering and agony personified.

Penrhyn Stanlaws is beginning to see the light of commercialization through the smoke from the altar of sacrificed art.

The redemption of "Pink Gods" comes in the work of James Kirkwood, the leading man. His work is never anything but good and here it is even better than usual.

Anna Q. Nilsson, the more noticeable leading lady, plays her role without apparent effort and great poise.

Bebe Daniels, the diamond maniac of the story, is either miscast or misfortune has placed her in ridiculous situations through which she must struggle to the best of her ability.

George Cowl is at all times the master of his acting destiny, though the story forgets him for two reels.

Adolphe Manjou is present with an over-villanous part while Raymond Hatton and Guy Oliver support the heavy end of the film.

Arthur Trimble gives a clever kiddie performance.

"Cops"

SINCE Buster Keaton made "One Week" we have been breathlessly awaiting another masterpiece from that comedian. "Cops," his latest picture, is not it nor does it come anywhere near.

As usual the story was written by Keaton and Eddie Kline and the direction just happened.

There is mild amusement and two or three big laughs in this hectic two reels, but "Cops" does little to further proclaim Keaton the leading slapstick comedian of the screen.

"The Glorious Adventure"

FOR some time we have been hearing reports of "The Glorious Adventure" and from those reports we expected to see a more or less stupid picture with little or no story and poor acting. However, it was not that bad. "The Glorious Adventure" is worse.

In the first place the photography in two colors is novel and supposed to be the main attraction of this film. In fact it should cover up the struggles of nobility. But it looks the results of a very bad child with the paint box. All the bright red and vivid blue are thrown together making a huge splash dazzling to behold.

Let us hope that further English nobility refrain from answering the call of celluloid and remain at home to be betrayed on canvas by the portrait artists. Lady Diana Manners is not an actress but her name sounds good on the screen and will attract the first time. After that all the color films in the universe will not make the blue-blooded Diana a nationwide attraction.

The direction is stiff and unnatural until the fire scenes and then it is up to the photographer who has made some wonderful flame scenery.

A huge cast accompanies Lady Diana. Gerald Lawrence, a leading man of effeminate looks and action, Alice Crawford, who goes through all the actions of a female heavy, without convincing, William Luff, Cecil Humphreys, Lennox Pawle, Rosalie Heath, the Hon. ## A League for Freelances

By a Pennsylvania Freelance

I have read the interesting and timely letter of Winona Boutree, of conditions now existing between the freelance writers and the producers. Among other things she says: "Why not be honest with the public—say to them frankly: 'Thank you, good people, but we cannot use your efforts,' etc., and I predict within 90 days the amateur inflow would be reduced to the minimum."

I have in my possession a bulletin issued by a former prominent studio reader and fiction writer—a man who is considered by the guild thoroughly competent and honest, and according to his idea—he should know from past experiences—the studios do not want the inflow of ideas stopped, for if that were done, their studio staff who are drawing big salaries would have nothing to do—no ideas to work upon.

Let me quote from aforesaid bulletin:

When the freelance writer has written an absolutely original scenario, a photoplay masterpiece, he has about one chance in a million of selling it to a producer if it is not copyrighted. . . .

Out of tens of thousands of uncopyrighted scenarios written by unknown freelance writers in the past year, perhaps a half dozen were sold. . . .

A producer may like and want your story, but dare not risk becoming involved in a law suit by producing a story that is unprotected by a copyright. . . .

Unknown writers of hundreds of scenarios never received a cent for their brain children, but perhaps the brain children were produced.

Staff writers must furnish a certain number of good stories a year. Do you know where these writers get all the good stories? Do they create them themselves? . . . .

It is not likely that twenty thousand or more freelance writers are all fools and several hundred staff writers are all geniuses. Staff writers have sold dozens of stories and you have written dozens and sold none. What is the answer? It is obvious. . . .

If the great deluge of unsolicited and uncopyrighted scenarios that come to the studios every day should suddenly cease, quite a number of salaried staff writers would lose their jobs for failing to furnish original stories as per contract with their producers. Do you know the terrible heartache that comes when you see your story on the screen with another name as the author of it?

The author of this bulletin is absolutely reliable, and from his years of experience in studio work his opinion should be respected. He does not claim that the producers are dishonest. On the contrary he states that the vast majority of them are honest and are paying their staffs big salaries to furnish the stories.

But here is the rub: The staff gain their ideas from the thousands of unsolicited scripts sent in, and the authors of those ideas never receive a cent for same. It is a poor lot of amateur stories which will not furnish at least a dozen good ideas to the thousand scripts. And all a trained staff writer requires is the main idea. It is no trouble whatever for them, trained in the technique, to add stock situations to fill out a completed play.

Wake up, freelance writers. Let those who are paid for ideas furnish them. Do not be the goat any longer.

Let's get together and form a league for freelance writers, with a staff competent to put a valuable idea into play form, then sell it to the producer. We are tired of furnishing staff writers with ideas for plays gratis.

Alan Dwan will direct Dick Barthelmess' next picture, "The Redemption of David Corson," a costume play.

Audrey Chapman will be married Saturday, October 14, to Richard Evan Roberts, vice-president of the San Bernardino National Bank. Miss Chapman will retire from pictures. Her final screen appearance will be in Jack Pickford's "Garrison's Finish."

Edy Darclea, who played the leading role of "Nero," has been featured in a new picture of Unity productions, under the title of "Why Do Men Marry?" The second picture of Unity Productions will be "A Woman's Story."

Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast productions, has had a continuous stream of inquiries regarding the new Karr series of comedies. "Fatty's" work in "Human Hearts," "The Beautiful Liar" with Katherine MacDonald and his many other outstanding parts has attracted considerable attention.

The leading woman for the Karr series is still being sought for Bruce Mitchell. East Coast productions, who will release these pictures, have some definite ideas as to whom they want, and Mitchell is trying to oblige.

Ernest Torrence will go to Utah and Nevada to make exteriors for the Lasky production, "The Covered Wagon."

Eve Unsell, head of B. P. Schulberg's story producing department, has provided the screen version of the story, "Are You a Failure?"

Max Mogi, comedian, is co-author with his brother Sam Mogi for the screen story, "The Love Toll," now in the hands of Goldwyn scenario editors.

MUSICAL COMEDY STAR HERE

The footlights have lost another clever artist in the person of Winifred Freeman who, during her appearances with Al Jolson and other musical comedy stars in New York gained recognition as a capable entertainer. Miss Freeman recently arrived in Hollywood to give motion pictures the twice around and has decided to establish a permanent residence here.

A preview of "The Devil's Ghost," a five-reel western starring Lester Cuneo, was held at the Paramount theater last week. Henry McCarty wrote the story and directed.

Frank Urson, who collaborated with Marshall Neilan on the latter's latest production, "The Strangers' Banquet," underwent a major operation at the Good Samaritan hospital last week.

With the Rev. Philip A. Easley of St. Stephen's church, Hollywood, a party of ministers visited Goldwyn studio. They are on their way to their home towns from the sessions in Portland, Oregon, of the General Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Alfred Allen, character actor, has arrived at Universal city from New York to appear in "White Tiger."

Irving Cummings will take his producing organization to Italy to film the exterior scenes for "The Last Days of Pompeii," from Bulwer Lytton's novel.

P. A. Powers plans to make a trip to Europe to appraise the market for his productions.

Joe Engel is back in New York City, and will report on the Metro studios.

This little lady who has done so well in the small parts given her, is Peggy Marlowe. She received her training as a child, playing with E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, and later in stock and vaudeville.

Frank McLure was injured last week on his way to Goldwyn studio when the car in which he was riding ran into a dray. He was taken to the new Culver City receiving hospital.

EDITORIAL

With Mallets toward none,
And Clarity for all!

The management of this cosmopolitan publication has lots of regard for the boys and girls who contribute so lavishly to the return departments of the scenario offices of our fair Hollywood. And we have as much sympathy for the same as anyone extant in our fair land.

But, let it be said and be widely known, also, that our uttermost sympathy cannot extend to accepting ranch produce in exchange for subscriptions, such as scenarios and citrus fruit, generally speaking.

"The Script" is an up and going publication. Almost everyone that writes tells us how forward it is. As such we cannot support a large staff of who's whats without remuneration and wherewithal to feed 'em.

And all, by and large, are completely and unanimously fed up on scenarios.

EDITORIAL NOTICE

Owing to the fact that we are going to press on Wednesday in order to have a day to write a six-reel screacher in, we are not carrying the news of the Discovery of the Land of the Free-lance and the Home of Brains, which occurs Thursday. ## PERSONALS, ETCETERA

Including Bright Locals Which Are Not Published Elsewhere

Frank E. Grove, chief selectman of The Writing Finger, who has become noted since his name has appeared in The Script, can play pool as well as he plays golf. But have you ever seen him play golf?

Ripper Whose, a promising beginner who was discovered by this publication, promised to write an article for this number, but didn't have the remembrance to keep his promise.

T. Buck Cannon, whose plays were first brought to public notice through these columns, is writing another piece called "A Snort in the Flask is Worth Ten in the Theater."

G. Phister Phlatt, official listener at The Writing Finger, was discovered with cotton in his ears during vital discussions by authors as how good their stories are and telling plots of same to said listener. Several indignant scenarioists say they will take the matter up with the bored directors.

Rube Vogner, who made the Saturday Pest what it is today, and now look at the darn thing, advises all writers who make up funny stories for comedy pictures to wear golf pants. Then listen to remarks as you pass and you will get all the funny subtitles you need, which is the most important part of writing comedies, says Itube. This is for men only.

Pretty Poor Shenanigan, whose business has been looking up since using these columns freely, says he got round shouldered adapting "The Hunchback of Hoboken," or some such notorious works. P. P. sure gets off some funny laughs every now and then say we.

Marie Bureau Pixit wanted to change the title, "Nobody's Money," to something like "The Income Tax Collector," but Hill Ways telegraphed not to do so under no circumstances. So she did not.

Willies Richer, the well known subscriber to this paper, says the newspaper business is all O. K. as long as you can look at it from the outside—say a studio, where you can get it out tomorrow if you feel a lot of onwee coming on today.

Wallie Th' Kid, tutored so successfully by The Script in scenario writing, used to be a drama critic in San Francisco, but he has been an inmate of Lasky's for some time. San Francisco has shown improvement for some time.

PALATIAL CLUB TO OPEN WITH ECLAT

Quite a Few Improvements Will Astound and Edify

An event which probably and most likely will put it all over the armistice, Will Hays' appointment, the Giants winning the pennant, and the proposed Rockefeller benefit, will be the grand opening of the newly embossed and otherwise highly embellished lounging place for brain nobility, known as The Writers' club house.

As a matter of fact, it is opened every morning and closed the next morning, but this is going to be an extra special opening to show members, and the residue of the world, what money can do if not put into independent pictures.

A stupendous surprise is due those who have remained aloof from our worthy treasurer for some time.

Not only have eating tables been placed in the dining room, and pool tables in the pool room, but a stage has been constructed in the theater.

A good many made suggestions from time to time as to what ought to be done with the theater, until finally the board of governors had a happy thought.

They shook dice for it and what was thought to be a formerly erratic idea won.

So the stage was built from the kitty, and all is ready for the grand opener.

In addition to the admission charge, there will be other entertainment, such as eating, dancing and regular stage plays at the sumptuous event, which is expected to occur at almost any time now.

Quite a number of members have contributed one-act plays composed from the fifth reel of scenarios they have not been able to sell to date.

Watch for it, the opening, we mean.

Use "Erase" for cleaning up returned MSS.—Adv.

CLUB NEWS

(Motto: 'Tis more blessed to club than be clubbed.)

Some of the members who come to the club rooms eat there also.

Dancing is a favorite occupation of members while attending club dances.

Several unfortunates have been weeping on the shoulders of the grievance committee recently of late.

Names of the Committee in the Hole will be found firmly attached to the bulletin board.

McGRAWMAN'S STUNT

Our fellow townsman, Slide McGrawman, says he is going to put in an innovation in his Hollywood theater, just as soon as he opens. It will be a personal appearance of the title writers. He says that these mysterious folks of the film world should prove as interesting as anything else that the public doesn't know nothing about.

The delightful charm of nice proportions and artistic design is noticeable in each piece of our furniture. But more than that it has the durability that comes with thorough workmanship in construction. This means lasting satisfaction.

WHAT human tragedies these are—the stories of the girls who want to be famous “like Mary Pickford and Norma Talmadge” . . . the girls whose hopes are skilfully roused by alluring word pictures and promises of the “professors” of film acting and make-up. . . . whose ambitions are finally crumpled with their young spirits when realization comes.

Mary goes to Los Angeles.

Take the case of one girl. Mary, we'll call her, for Mary symbolizes many. And her story is the story of many girls.

Mary lives in a small town in Oregon. She attends high school. She has admiring high school beaux, who assure her that she puts Katherine MacDonald in the shade. Perhaps her mirror supports the flattery. Why should Mary doubt her destiny to shine on the silver screen?

Mary, in deviltry, one day answers a blind ad that tells of new talent needed for pictures.

In reply she receives a form letter telling her the glorious possibilities of Hollywood. Of the great dearth of film actresses. Of the fabulous sums that stars receive. How even the extra girl can afford fine clothing and many luxuries.

Mary reads, believes, makes up her ambitious little mind.

Somehow, somewhere she gets enough money to come to Los Angeles.

The “course” in motion picture acting.

She finds the school housed in a $25-a-month office in one of the shabbier downtown buildings.

But the luring statements of the school promoter draw her on.

Why, next week a picture is casting—a course of make-up now, and in a few days—just think!—she'll be really acting before the camera! She'll appear on the screen, be seen everywhere! Won't her old schoolmates be proud they knew her! Won't her mother weep with joy and pride when daughter sends a fat check every week!

She pays her $15. She goes to a regular, professional make-up store—just like an actress—and buys $2.50 worth of supplies. She pays $12 for a dozen photographs—professional pictures, to give casting directors! How thrilling!

Six lessons of an hour each, and the course is completed. She is a full-fledged actress. Now she is told to register—as all the film players do—there's no charge.

She does so, then every day primps up in her prettiest, comes hopefully to the registration office expecting the great moment when she gets her first studio work.

The key to Studioland?

Goaded to impatience, one day she makes complaint. Then, maybe, she's told of a “club.” Its members are friends of an agent. They're on the “inside,” and are called to work before anyone on the regular files. Club “dues” are only $1 a month.

Relieved to find at last the key to the magic land behind studio gates, she pays the “dues.”

New hope. Again she calls day after day. Her finances are getting low. Even $500 doesn't last long in Los Angeles without a steady income. Maybe she hasn't nearly that much to start on. She finds a cheaper room; doubles up with another “graduate actress.”

But finally comes that morning when she finds, with quick sinking of her heart, no money left for breakfast. She is desperate. She demands an interview with the manager of the registration bureau or the promoter of the school.

He may be able to help her. He may not. If he does he can obtain a further price, perhaps. But in any case, he cannot get her steady work. Even a “graduate actress” is somehow considered unexperienced by casting directors.

Behind the scenes of tragedy.

Disgraced by failure, home would be unendurable. There remains what? Clerking in a department store? Dancing in a cheap musical comedy chorus? A professional habitue of the dance halls? The streets?

Mary makes her choice and we hear of her no more. (Unless some time, arrested, she gives occupation as “movie actress.”)

That is the story of Mary.

* * *

We may not be able to help the Marys who have been swept through the tragic mills of the movie schools.

But perhaps we can do something to prevent other Marys from following in their footsteps.

That is Camera!'s aim.

—TED TAYLOR.

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

Hugo Ballin plans to make "Vanity Fair" his next production. Mabel Ballin will play the role of "Becky Sharp." This picture was chosen by the public when requested by Ballin to select the subject of his next picture.

Albert Rogell productions started work this week at Fine Arts on its first story, "The Great Menace," a tale exposing the drug evil. Rogell is directing and Jack Livingston is a member of the all-star cast.

Monty Banks has started another two-reel comedy for the Ben Wilson productions. Ward Hayes is directing at the Berwill studios.

Carter De Haven, having returned from an extended trip east, has started another picture at the studios. The working title of this picture is "The False Alarm," and is being directed by Henry Lehrman. Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven are being starred in it.

Irving Cummings is preparing for his next production, "The Last Days of Pompeii," Bulwer Lytton's masterpiece. Production will start shortly at the Hollywood studios.

"Have A Heart," a story of automobiles, will be the next Agnes Ayres' Paramount Picture which will start within the next ten days under the direction of Paul Powell. The story is an original by Byron Morgan and has been adapted for the screen by Will M. Ritchey.

"The Hottentot," Willie Collier's successful comedy, is to be screened. Thomas H. Ince, the producer, announces the film version will be ready for early release.

"Your Friend and Mine," a dramatic sketch by Willard Mack, which was also played in vaudeville under the title of "The Rat," will be the new S-L (Sawyer-Lubin) special production for Metro.

Allen Holubar's next production for First National release will be a picturization of Jeffry de Prend's "The White Frontier." Mr. Holubar is now enroute to Montreal to choose locations. Production will start at the United Studio in about three weeks. Dorothy Phillips will have the stellar role.

William King, who for the past three years has been engaged in film distribution and exchange work in New York, has formed a producing company and will start work shortly at the Fine Arts studios on his first story. While his stories have a dramatic theme, they will be educational topics. Each subject will be two reels in length and presented with a cast of prominent artists.

"Trouble Buster," Jess Robbins' latest story for Vitagraph release, has entered its fourth week of production at the Fine Arts studios. Edward Everett Horton is the star and Edith Roberts has the leading feminine role. Robbins is director, and Vernon Walker is in charge of photography.

Marshall Neilan has purchased the screen rights to "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the most famous novel of Thomas Hardy, dean of English letters. The picture will be made in association with the Goldwyn Pictures corporation. It will be filmed in England, and also at Goldwyn's studio in Culver City.

While Raymond McKee is appearing before the camera in New York, he is also writing for Camera! in Los Angeles

HAMPTON TO PRODUCE "THE SPOILERS"

"The Spoilers," Rex Beach's story of the Alaskan gold rush, which was the first super-motion picture production, is to be filmed again. Jesse D. Hampton has secured the screen right to the story through a special arrangement with the author, and will produce the picture for Metro release at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Actual production will be started on "The Spoilers" just as soon as the director and cast desired can be obtained.

Graf productions have become affiliated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors association, which was formed last March with former Postmaster General Will H. Hayes as the President. Louis Graf is executive head of the Graf productions. "The Forgotten Law," which is the initial production to be made by Graf, will have its premier showing in November. Work of arranging the second story is now in progress, and the actual filming will be started in the near future.

Maurice Tourneur will make four big productions during the coming year, which will be presented by M. C. Leve through First National. The first will be a picturization of Crittenden Marriotti's "The Isle of Dead Ships." The production will be filmed at the United Studios and on the kelp beds near San Juan Capistrano. Production starts in two weeks.

Complete

"The Web of The Law," the first of a series of six Texas Ranger features being made for the Independent market, was completed this week by Director Tom Gibson and the negative sent to New York for distribution. Patricia Palmer and Bill Miller played the leading roles. Elmer Dyer photographed. Production upon the second of the series will commence shortly.

"Lorna Doone" is soon to be released. It is a lavish historical production. Madge Bellamy has the title role, and Frank Keenan has the part of Sir Ensor Doone.

"Ten Ton Love," a human-interest film story made at Ince studios, soon to be released. Madge Bellamy plays the part of a quaint little elephant girl. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan and was directed by John Griffith Wray.

Truth About the Schools

SINCE Camera! has been publishing the truth about the schools of acting and make-up, a curious change has occurred in the classified advertising of some of these enterprises.

They have dropped the phrase "experience not necessary" from their ads.

That doesn't satisfy Camera! however. They are still able, in the first question asked each applicant, to discover whether or not the girl or man has had experience in movies.

If the applicant confesses "experience," he or she is told "the cast is complete," or is steered away in some other manner.

If the applicant admits inexperience, he or she is informed that experience is necessary before appearing in the production advertised as casting. Experience includes a course in acting and make-up for anywhere from $15 to $100; a makeup box from the simple outfit of $2.50 or so, to the most elaborate layouts for character work; professional photographs at $12 or more a dozen (regular price $7.50 for two dozen); and possibly membership in some registration club" at $1 a month, indefinitely.

The game is to milk each applicant for everything possible in as many ways as can be devised.

And, of course, the petty grafts of the "schools" are only one source of income. If anyone with real money comes along, it's easy to organize a motion picture production company on the spur of the moment and secure anywhere from $5,000 to $35,000 in a wad.

But Camera! is still interested in the schools. With their petty grafts they make hundreds of persons suffer who can ill afford to lose their hard-saved earnings.

FASHION-INDUSTRIAL FILM COMPANY

For quick action try the Fashion-Industrial Film company.

During four weeks they told of a picture that was "forthcoming," in efforts to find thoroughly inexperienced talent for it.

Last Sunday it was READY TO SHOOT—in capitals, just like that!

Wednesday it was enrolling cast for second production.

How's that for speed? Producers will eventually agree that the Fashion-Industrial has discovered some ideal method of picture production.

No spending a week or less in casting, and four or five weeks in actually filming the production—benighted custom prevalent in the studios! Instead, take four weeks for casting—no overhead except for casting director and assistant—and have things lined up so that your production is photographed in two days!

Camera! hopes Mr. Lasky, Mr. Lehr and Mr. Thalberg will read of this achievement of efficiency and take it to heart. Evidently the industry is on the brink of an economic revolution, and doesn't know it.

So if you suddenly decide that you simply must be in a motion picture by tomorrow, clip this ad:

FASHION INDUSTRIAL FILM company wants enrolling new cast for second production of Max Asher comedies. Inexperienced talent will find real screen opportunity by calling, 5444 Hollywood blvd.

This ad is an improvement over the preceding series of the Fashion-Industrial Film company. Previously it directed applicants to call at the Assistant Directors' association hall. Camera! sincerely trusts the change was ordered by the Assistant Directors' association.

In September, when a "well-known comedian" let it be known to the world through the want ads that he would actually cast a picture with inexperienced talent, there was considerable speculation as to whether Charles Chaplin or Buster Keaton was the great innovator.

FOR the information of readers, Camera! herewith lists schools of motion picture acting and make-up and other film activities advertising in the classified sections of Los Angeles papers. Letters are invited from any readers who have had experience with these enterprises.

JACK POLO, 308 Mason Opera house building. Wants refined men and women for steady work if right type. Exchanges prospects with Goldstein, Chamber of Commerce.

BENNY GOLDSTEIN, 418 Chamber of Commerce building. Last call was for 40 persons with good wardrobe to make $7.50 to $15 a day. Exchanges prospects with Polo, Mason Opera house.

SELECT FILM COMPANY, 315 Laughlin building. Wants cultured people for pictures now casting.

BALSHOFER STUDIO, 1329 Gordon street. Receiving applications for picture now casting.

5107 HOLLYWOOD BOULEVARD. New proposition for inexperienced women who want to get in movies.

DRAMATIC ART STUDIO, 4534 Sunset blvd. Wants inexperienced types to learn acting, make-up and play in pictures.

SCRIPTURE FILMS, Inc., 921 Loew's State theater building. Offers contract in return for investment. Requires make-up course from R. B. Wilcox, 643 South Olive street.

FILM EXCHANGE, 643 South Olive street. R. B. Wilcox wants types, experience unnecessary; sends them to Scripture Films, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD FILM COMPANY, 311 Grosse building. M. J. Lynch offers contract to persons qualifying.

APOLLO FILM COMPANY, 319 Grosse building. M. J. Lynch conducts classes in make-up and acting; $15 for 6 lessons.

BUD HARRIS, 734 Olive street. "Branch" of Classic Film Actors' Agency; sends pupils to Apollo Film Company.

LOS ANGELES ACADEMY OF DRAMATIC ART. Same as Apollo Film Company.

BOYLE HEIGHTS STUDIO, 753 Boyle avenue; instruction fee, guarantees work when production is made.

JACK C. O'BRIEN PRODUCTIONS, 410 Court street, wants new types, experience unnecessary, gives lessons. Has agents at room 1004, 405 South Hill street, and room 215, 321 Third street.

FASHION INDUSTRIAL FILM COMPANY, 5444 Hollywood boulevard (Assistant Directors' association rooms); Max Asher offers tuition in acting and make-up, work at studios without pay required in training.

HARRY GAYLORD PRODUCTIONS, Santa Monica and Bronson avenues (Caswell studio); want persons to invest, take instruction, and act. Works with "agency" at 646 San Fernando building.

CRAWFORD. Caswell studio, Santa Monica and Bronson. Wants 2 blondes, 4 brunettes, 4 character women, 7 young men, 3 character men for pictures. Offices at 644 San Fernando building, wants types immediately, experience unnecessary.

RICHARD THOMAS PRODUCTIONS, 5821 Santa Monica boulevard, (Berwill studio), wants actors to invest in units of stock, paid back with interest on release of each picture.

The following Sunday the secret was out. Max Asher was the "well-known comedian," and all tuition was given under his personal supervision. Mr. Asher recently landed a job in a Century comedy, of which fact the Los Angeles dramatic editors have been thoroughly informed.

Mr. Asher receives applicants all day Mondays and Wednesdays, but only in the mornings of Tuesdays and Thursdays. Perhaps the call of the lot is too strong on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, causing him to tear away from the grind of personally supervising tuition of applicants for roles in Fashion-Industrial Films. Perhaps not.

Anyhow, he will now accept a few more inexperienced talent (if said talent has money for some personally supervised tuition).

O. Van Der Steyn, general manager of the Fashion-Industrial Film company, will gladly vouch for Mr. Asher.

"A course in make-up and acting can be had for $20," said Mr. Van Der Steyn to a representative (incognito) of Camera!

"Not only do you receive classroom instruction in acting and make-up, but you actually work before the camera in regular motion pictures. In fact, we require this as part of the course."

Indeed, it is part of the training, and nothing extra is charged for the practical studio experience.

Who gets the $3 or the $5 paid by the studio for the pupil's work is not explained.

A rumor is current on Hollywood boulevard that whatever assistant director engages the "pupils" pays half of the $3 or the $5 received for each pupil's work to the school, and retains 50 per cent as a fee for his trouble.

It seems pupils are charged $20 for the course more as a matter of form than anything else.

"The $20 is our protection," Mr. Van Der Steyn explains in his confidential manner. "If we didn't charge it, we might have the entire populace here expecting us to teach them."

Exclusiveness! That's the watchword of Messrs. Asher, Van Der Steyn and the Fashion-Industrial Film company.

The Apollo Again

Apollo Film company wants immediately a few well-dressed men and women for picture now being cast. Presumably this is the "wonderful opportunity—experience unnecessary—registration free" that the Apollo had been advertising for weeks.

If the Apollo picture is all cast when you arrive at 319 Grosse building, possibly there's a chance to get in the "big motion picture" starting at room 311. Here a limited number of well-dressed men and women of all age will receive a long contract if qualified.

This contract will probably give the party of the second part, i. e. the one who is parting with $15) a course of acting and makeup for two weeks.

Also it will probably (as it has in the past) give every possible assistance in obtaining employment; in fact it will actually agree to give party of the second part employment in three productions—if party is type or character needed when there are orders from the different studios!

Where to Find People You Know

Baby Josephine Adair just finished in an all-star production with Edward Le Saint.

Lois Wilson is in the cast of "The Covered Wagon," a story by Emerson Hough, which James Cruze is directing for Lasky.

Harriet Laurel is playing the part of Lucette in "Michael O'Halloran," the Gene Stratton Porter production now in progress.

Rod LaRocque, leading man of both stage and screen, will play opposite Mae Murray in "Coronation," an original story by Edmund Goulding. Mr. LaRocque left a stage engagement in New York to come West with Miss Murray and appear in this picture.

Robert Fraser, who had the leading male role with Mae Murray in "Fascination," one of her recent Metro releases, came west to enact a prominent role in "Coronation."

"Coronation" will be photographed by Oliver Marsh, who has done the camera work for all of Miss Murray's recent Metro releases. Cedric Gibbons is designing the settings.

Max Davidson, one of the chief characters in "Abie's Irish Rose," is a leading player in Hunt Stromberg's newest comedy production featuring "Bull" Montana, "Glad Rags."

Martin Bendheim, who conducted Universal's recent expeditionary force to Europe as business manager, has returned to Universal City, where he will remain in an executive capacity.

Eileen Burdette is playing opposite Lewis Sargent for Universal in comedies of messenger boy life.

Philo McCullough is supporting Frank Mayo in "The Summons," a George Patullo story, directed by Edward Sedgwick.

Ralph Lewis has gone for a month's visit in Honolulu. He recently finished a part in "Chicago Sal" for the Irving Cummings productions.

Ernest Butterworth is playing "Reddy" with Colleen Moore in "Ninety and Nine," under the direction of Dan Smith at Vitagraph.

Andree Peyre, Pathe player, and "France's woman ace," who is visiting her mother in Paris, is having a special plane built in France. On her return to Hollywood to resume her film activities she will have the heavier-than-air craft shipped to the film capital for future aeronautical purposes.

Ruth Stonehouse is in Hollywood after a seven-day automobile trip from Portland, Ore., where she completed "The Clean-up," her third production with Premium Pictures. Lura Anson, who appeared in the cast with Miss Stonehouse, accompanied the star.

Winifred Dunn is preparing the adaptation and continuity for the Metro-Sawyer-Lubin production of "Your Friend and Mine," which Clarence G. Badger will direct. "Your Friend and Mine" is a sketch written by Willard Mack.

Theodore Kosloff will play a male lead in the Cecil De Mille production not yet titled. Elliott Dexter, Anna Q. Nilsson, and Pauline Garon are cast in the other leading roles.

Myrtle Stedman started work at the Meyer studio, under the direction of Fred Niblo.

We realize her versatility when we see the blonde Bessie Love in a Chinese characterization

Edward H. Griffith, director of a great many Alice Brady pictures, is back from Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

Carmel Myers has been engaged for the cast of "The Famous Mrs. Fair."

Doran H. Cox, assistant director to Fred Niblo in the making of "Blood and Sand" and "The Three Musketeers," will be with the director in the production of "The Famous Mrs. Fair."

Rowland V. Lee has been retained to direct Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," which is to be released through Associated Exhibitors. It is based on the Booth Tarkington novel which won the Pulitzer prize in 1921.

Baby Peggy, under the direction of Alf Goulding at Century, is cast as an imp of the streets who attains stage triumphs. Playing with Peggy are Joe Bonner, Lillian Hackett and Jack Henderson.

Lee Moran has organized the Century comedy ball team for his current picture. Harry Sweet and Tiny Ward have been engaged to play on it. Al Herman is directing.

Rosemary Theby has just signed a contract with Mrs. A. B. Maescher of the A. B. Maescher productions to co-star with J. Frank Glendon in the "Rip Tide."

Tom Gallery will have a leading role in "Glad Rags," the new Hunt Stromberg comedy for Metro.

J. K. McDonald announces the engagement of "Little Ben" Alexander for the company supporting the youthful star of the Johnny Jones comedies distributed by Pathe.

Lincoln Stedman, son of Myrtle Stedman, has been added to the cast for Katherine MacDonald's newest picture, "The Scarlet Lily."

Tiny Ward is appearing in support of Lee Moran in Lee's now-being-made Century comedy.

Lois Boyd and Jean Hope, both former members of Hal Roach's group of beauties, have been added to the cast of Baby Peggy's special Century production. Lois, who is a former Ziegfeld Follies girl, is doing her former stage specialty in Alf Goulding's theatre set in which Baby Peggy is working.

Myrtle Stedman has been selected by Fred Niblo to play the title role in his next production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," the Henry Miller-Blanche Bates success of two seasons ago.

Cullen Landis has completed "Forsaking All Others" at Universal and will play the role of Alan in the Fred Niblo production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair."

Adolphe Menjou is playing a prominent role in "Pink Gods," the Penrhyn Stanlaws production.

Eva Novak is taking a belated honeymoon having completed "Making A Man" with Jack Holt. This is an adaptation from Peter B. Kyne's story of the same name.

Harry Le Verne will appear as the doctor in the stage play, "The Door," to be produced by the Co-operative Repertoire Association under the direction of Harl McInroy the week of November 20th at a local playhouse.

Fatty Karr is starting this week on a series of two-reelers at the Federal studios. Bruce Mitchell is directing with Ray Rennahan on the camera.

Ray Rennahan, cinematographer since last January with the Technicolor company, has been engaged to film the Fatty Karr comedies, with Bruce Mitchell directing.

Rupert Hughes has finished his screen version of "Souls For Sale," his novel of motion picture life, which will be his next Goldwyn production. He will direct, edit and title it himself, but will engage actors to act it. James Flood and John Mescall will be assistant director and cameraman.

"Robin Hood"

Merging from the spectral past, a shadowy Titan, truly a son of Uranus and Gaea, has expanded into reality before the eyes of men, profound in its new being, exuberant in its arbitrament of sword and lance, vesperlike in its whisperings and, at all times hypnotic in its lure.

"Robin Hood," gallant champion of a nation in weeds, has returned, this time to carve the name of Douglas Fairbanks upon the granite of the everlasting mountain called memory.

Screen, theater, actor—all are forgotten as the spectator unconsciously clothes his imagination in the garb of court, and joins the valiant Coeur de Lion in that glorious spree of the third crusade.

He enters the great halls of the palace with a touch of awe at its hint of vastness. The tourney delights his appetite for the fantastic as he views the vistas of lances, the throngs of "brave men and fair women."

The vortex heightens to the vivid; it is vibratory; it is of rare flavoring.

First the impressive court with its dominant King Richard, he of the lion heart. Then the tournament with its myriads of colorful beings, the thundering of chargers' hoofs and the splintering of lances; and, as always, beautiful women to encourage with their charming wiles.

Amid it all the serpent coils; the trickish Prince John, who soon is going to turn things all awry and seize the throne to plunge England into torturous gloom.

Then the gleaming pageant, as king and his friend, Huntingdon, whom livid circumstances soon will evolve into the outlaw of Sherwood forest, sets forth for conquest in foreign lands.

It all is too enfolding, too breathlessly impressive to be the vapor of a traditional thing which must vanish with the passing of the hour.

Then Robin Hood and his frolicsome fellows fill the vales of Sherwood forest with their shouts of exuberance. Again stout Friar Tuck, trig Alan-a-Dale, Little John and Will Scarlett course afeld beside their frisky leader, to confound the tyrant and bring relief to the oppressed.

And, in a land where hope has been abandoned, the doughty Robin Hood flaunts everywhere the three lions of Richard, striking terror into the hearts of Prince John, and his bloody followers.

Thrill upon thrill speeds the exciting action to its heights, eventually to crash into an ensemble of results which leaves the audience spellbound and slow to recover the realization that the Twentieth century has returned, and that they have but dreamed this beautiful thing which must linger while memory functions.

As a production, the like of which still is to be equalled from a standpoint of delighting the eye, Douglas Fairbanks' production of "Robin Hood" is a wonderful example of what artistry can do for the screen.

Especially striking—and surprising, also, in these days—is the absence of the Babylonian taint. No wanton women force their distasteful way into the thing. There is no inanity, no balderdash, no trash. The ancient wheezes are absent for once.

True, Douglas Fairbanks, more nimble than ever in the past, steeple-chases in tree and turret, but you earnestly desire him to do so. If he seems to perform the impossible, at least you see him do it, and it delights.

And, as a side thought, there is no senseless prate in the titled word of the screen, a folly so fulsomely indulged in by some makers of specials.

"Timothy's Quest"

WHEN I am old,
And then must pause awhile
To sit beside life's pathway
With poignant grief
That rankles within a stubborn heart,
Preach me no sermons.
Bring no false words of sympathy,
But let there come a toddling child,
With cuddling arms,
To press warm lips
Upon this aged cheek of mine,
And I shall be content.

And when YOU are satiated with crime, and bloodshed, with ancient swashbuckling, and sleuthing, and sex, seek retreat at Miller's, and get back into the warm realities of life. Go and see Baby Helen Rowland and little Joseph Depew, Margaret Seddon and Marie Day, become before your very eyes, Timothy, Lady Gay, Alvada and Samantha in all reality, as if they lived again to reproach the screen of today with their simple story.

Feel the touch of a baby's soft sigh upon your heart, and do not be ashamed of a tear now and then; suffer and sympathize with Samantha, for her burden is as heavy as the hardness of her heart, and find the sadness relieved by laughter upon the intrusion of the champion gab-and-chatter character of the films, Vivian Ogden, who again is the village gossip.

You may not recognize many of the names, but you will not easily forget "Timothy's Quest," with its quaint New England atmosphere, as directed by Sidney Olcott. May the independent American Releasing organization give us more like it and like him.

W. W.

Of Fairbanks himself, enough has been said. Laurels for a king are never amiss. Therefore we will place them upon the heads of the two who occupied this throne of the middle ages. Instead of Richard, let us call him Wallace Beery, the lion-hearted. Could the shade of Richard look down upon Grauman's silver screen at this time, undoubtedly he himself would beg the privilege of placing his own crown upon that thespian's shaggy head. A magnificent characterization; a faultless and faithful performance. His contribution was a tribute to the ancient ruler himself.

Prince John, the brother, arch plotter and demon of ferocity, materialized and occupied the physical being of Sam de Grasse during this reincarnation of crowning mythology. Evil he portrayed; his innate subtlety, the cunning of his interpretation all lent to the characterization of the most hated role we have ever had the pleasure of hissing. From the very evil that he wrought—upon the screen—there came a halo for de Grasse, such as would have been a crowning glory for any famed thespian of past or present.

Paul Dickey was the loathesome Gisbourne in truth. He triumphed in the role.

The gentle Maid Marian was exemplified by the lovely Enid Bennett so sweetly, and with such remarkable taste, that higher praise hardly is necessary.

Those legend familiars, Friar Tuck, Little John, Will Scarlett and Alan-a-Dale, were well reincarnated by Willard Louis, Alan Hale, Maine Geary and Lloyd Talman, although, it must be confessed, "Robin Hood" left little for these to do in the general cleanup.

Roy Coulson well portrayed the king's ill-fated jester. Billie Bennett was good as the serving woman. Merrill McCormick and Wilson Bengue were very valiant henchmen of Prince John. A tremendous concourse of people appeared in the many mass scenes.

While the sets were massive, natural (thank heaven), and impressive, Arthur Edeson and his camera must be honored for making them profound. There always is beauty in nature and fantastic caravan, but Arthur Edeson and his kind must be artists to convey this beauty to the screen, such as that revealed in "Robin Hood." The photography is a large part of its value.

Allan Dwan directed the tremendous production and Lotta Woods, the Fairbanks' scenario editor, adapted Elton Thomas' story with much wisdom and genius. Wilfred Buckland was supervising art director.

"Nero"

IT SEEMS that the object of "Nero," a Fox film, is to show the world how badly acted, and historically decomposed, a foreign film may be and still go so far as to please the youngest generation.

When the majestic Nero, last of the Caesars, craved inspiration he pointed his finger at Rome and said, "Thy name is bonfire," and his faithful slaves made an ash heap of the seven hills. But this celluloid account of Nero and his playing of the harp fails to solve a weighty problem for the kiddies. An infantile screech in our left ear demanded to know what the fire department was doing while Rome burned. But next we saw the fire horses running a chariot race in the stadium, so we understood.

The story rambles along in a never-ending, disconnected manner, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

Violet Mercereau, the predominating figure, makes surprising efforts to act intelligently.

For the most part the cast over-acts and is stagey in spite of natural settings.

"The Big Scoop"

IN making the addition of adults to the production, "The Big Scoop," J. K. McDonald has added to the interest of the story but denies us seeing more footage in which the delightful kiddies romp about. Johnny Jones is working his gang about a printing press this time. Much to our sorrow there is little place for Gertrude Messinger who is as popular with us as with Johnny's gang.

However, the story under the direction of Mason Litson is as sturdy and unwavering here as in his masterpiece, "Makin' Movies."

The photography by Ray June is beautiful and lighting is skillfully handled.

The story, by James Finn, is too crowded with situations to well do justice to all. But a few are developed and another gloom chaser is ready for the screen.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower"

Advertised upon a gigantic scale, announced practically as one of the world's greatest cinema productions, and absorbing all of the editorial and publicity talent of the huge Hearst organization for many months, the Cosmopolitan production of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," has wrought the public up to such pitch of expectation that nothing could satisfy them but—

A promise fulfilled.

"Knighthood" neither is the greatest production, nor is it the premier presentation of the present day. If it had not been forced to flamboyantly promise so much, one might see more worthiness in the picture than when obsessed by visions paid for by Hearst, at so much per line and inch.

It is true that there are numerous sets, some of them as magnificent as the costuming. The story was well and nicely produced. It rises to the pretentious, yes, but there is too much Marion Davies, and that fact tells a grievous story.

True it is that Miss Davies gives us a surprisingly intelligent performance, but it also is evident that her scenes were carefully picked from many thousand feet of carefully posed, artistically lighted and skillfully photographed footage.

The booklet issued with each admission shrieks more loudly of expense and footage than of artistry and composition; of a remarkable pageantry and the intelligence which made the very life of the spectacular offering what it is.

Doubtless many reels of actual values were necessarily trimmed away to reduce the production to its nine reels, but it is evident that others besides Marion Davies were sacrificed by the discard.

An overplus of any good thing is a very bad thing for diners and audiences.

In the few hundred feet allowed other members of the cast Forrest Stanley is prominent in Miss Davies' support. He troops and wields his trusty sword in a regular movie duel.

Lyn Harding as Henry VIII and William Norris as Louis XII give satisfying characterizations.

Pedro de Cordoba, Ernest Glendenning, William Powell, Arthur Forrest, Macey Harlam, Johnny Dooley, William Kent, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Charles Gerrard, George Nash, Arthur Donaldson, Theresa Maxwell Conover, Flora Finch and Ruth Shepley all combined their efforts supporting Miss Davies to stardom.

"Under Two Flags"

LONG, long ago, even before Bryan was the best president we never had, a very sad story was written about Cecil of the royal guards. It was called "Under Two Flags." There was a girl in it called "Cigarette."

Recently, at Universal City, Tod Browning, a director and a scenarist, wrote a Priscilla Dean story about a girl called "Cigarette." There was a man in it called Cecil.

Neither of these stories has a conclusion upon the screen at the present showing, although it may be presumed that Cigarette dies in the arms of Cecil after the audience has gone home. Also the villain may have been punished, Cecil's great wrong righted, and the yearning princess may have returned to Cecil's arms.

Well, isn't it the function of all pictures to send them away guessing?

The Universal offering of "Under Two Flags" is melodrama, the situations of which have been repeated many times since the book was written. It is a little spectacular, especially in the familiar, haste-to-the-rescue in the last reel. But it is interesting to the many who like that sort of thing, and should meet financial success in these days of sudden favor for old-country stuff.

Priscilla Dean is well fitted to the role of "Cigarette."

James Kirkwood, always a sterling actor, is the man of the story.

Stuart Holmes is a particularly hateful heavy; Ethel Terry gives a finished performance as the princess, and John Davidson is a sleek sheik, without which character no production is safe these days. Robert Mack has a fine bit. Burton Law and Arthur Pollet are very agreeable in their parts.

The Lloyd Hamilton comedy, on the same program, is one of the most laughable absurdities of the screen year.

"Sherlock Holmes"

AN IDEAL Sherlock Holmes, directly from the illustration in Conan Doyle's book, strode out upon the screen at the California this week, and forced Moriarity, the mightiest crook of his time, to dig in deeper and deeper, although he merely laughed at Scotland Yard previously.

John Barrymore first and all the time is an actor. And that was what was highly necessary to put Holmes on the screen without exciting laughter from the audience. Barrymore played the omnipotent detective with the nicest balance in the world. This Sherlock person, as in the book, knows just what is in the secret mind of his hidden enemy; he always is aware that there was an assassin on the other side of the stone wall; nothing needs to be explained—he tells us and we believe.

The incident of recovering the prince's letters written to the girl he wronged was the groundwork for this production, but the adapter put Holmes' romance into it, and had him catch Moriarity at the close.

The popularity of Doyle's detective tales at this late day could not be proven more emphatically than by the constant line at the California, nor could a screen interpretation have been more satisfactory.

Carol Dempster, borrowed from Griffith, was the sweet girl with nothing much to do. Gustave von Seyffertitz was a Professor Moriarity to hate, and Rowland Young was a very good but not a very valuable Dr. Watson. There is a long list of minor characters.

What Folks Think

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 14.—Editor Camera!—He advised the Aywon Film exchange is a branch office of the Aywon Film corporation at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, of which Nathan Hirsh is president. Mr. Hirsh is the pioneer of the motion picture industry and has established a high reputation all over the country. The Los Angeles office is operated by Mrs. M. A. Smith, his sister, who is interested in high class enterprises only.

We noticed in this week's issue of Camera! in the article, "Truth About Schools," you mention the Aywon in connection with a Mr. Harris and Lynch. We do not know these men, and they have no connections with us and never had in any shape or form or manner.

Some time ago we noticed newspaper ads, the kind you mention in your article, signed "Inquire of Mr. Harris, Film Exchange," or just "Film Exchange, 734 South Olive." We called Mr. Harris' attention to the fact that he was not running a film exchange, and explained to him the meaning of the word and what it stands for.

We commend you for the stand you take in the matter and we are in sympathy with your movement. But we feel you owe us an apology and we ask you to retract your statement in regard to our standing in your next issue.

AYWON FILM EXCHANGE,
M. A. SMITH.

HE SOLVES THE PROBLEM

Editor Camera!—As you know, there are a number of "Scenario School" institutions that advertise widely in glowing terms the emoluments to be derived from scenario writing, and that assure the gullible what a cinch it is to get into the game and peel off a couple of thousand bucks or so.

Personally I have the gravest sort of doubts that scenario writing can be taught unless the "student" is pretty well versed in at least newspaper writing. Here or there a person with a natural bent for writing may be unearthed and turn out a scenario that is possible. But take it from me, and I imagine you need no assurance on that subject, the person that can turn out an acceptable scenario can turn out a magazine yarn, and the one that cannot construct and tell a plot attractively enough to break into the magazines may as well pull daisies, as waste time on trying to grind out scenarios.

Be all that as it may, the fact is that thousands upon thousands of poor suckers are attracted by this "Why don't YOU write a scenario?" rot and without ever writing to the "School" take their pens in hand and dash off the veriest piffle that seems marvelous to themselves. Barbers, chambermaids, shipping clerks, paying tellers, clergymen, and fat dowagers with puffy ankles hanging over their shoe tops are writing their heads off, cluttering up the desks of editors and, worst of all, snowing under the real POSSIBLE stuff sent in by professional writers, many of whom have learned the technique of the screen.

What's to be done about it? If moving picture editors would require that under their names authors put the names of magazines and names of stories they have written for magazines, and if they would refuse to read manuscripts not so authenticated with the stamp of possibilities, nine-tenths of the junk now received in the mails would be cut out and what remained would at least be worth while reading. In other words, let aspirants PROVE that they are possibilities when they submit manuscripts and if they can't do that let them write for magazines until such time as they have established themselves.

I do not see why this is not feasible and practical. It would prevent an army of soreheads that go around knocking the movies because their impossible stuff has been refused. It would protect the writer that is a writer. It would simplify the work of editors and it would knock the grafters that are within the law, parasiting on the industry.

War in Ireland

"If, perchance, thou findest no enemy to punish, then turn thee and smite thy brother upon the bean."

—Ancient Escritoirean maxim.

It seems that the pleasure of flattening out an opponent often sinks into insignificance as compared with the great joy of handing it to those we cherish.

As witness: gladsome peace conferences, the family circle in our foremost police courts, charity of the Standard Oil towards the public and—

That part of New York known as the Emerald Isle. After cleaning up at all points of the compass, Ireland is now trying some of the same upon a race which cannot be whipped—the Irish.

To say nothing of certain examples of brotherly affection in the film game.

If this was not the writers' page, our first gush of affection would go to the fellow who is making his living in the picture industry but who, perhaps to relieve his system from atavistic putridity, is breaking into print for the purpose of hurling the harpoon into the profession which is feeding him.

This modern head-hunter has it all over his ancestor who used to whittle up the human liver for the fun of the thing. In fact the latter appears as but an innocent child, wending its way to Sunday school in pinafore and with a very pious expression upon its features, as compared with the secret assassin of employer and profession.

He "exposes" the films; they are going to the devil.

He is "ashamed" of the movies, but does not dare sign his name because it would lose him his job in the movies. And certain publications seem to lust for his thrusts of disloyalty and lies.

This secret traitor—and there are several of him—is the mad dog of filmdom, but there is poison out for him.

However, as already intimated, this is a writers' page and, much as we would like to say something upon the subject, we are absolutely barred from uttering our views anent disgruntled failures.

Therefore we will confine this gem of thought strictly to a proper subject.

But first, be it known, our wildly coursing blood has calmed, and our voice now is tuned to a more dulcet note.

Our optics no longer flash fire but, instead, turn upon certain fellow writers with hurt reproach, the how-could-you thing, a look of betrayed confidence such as one bestows upon a thirsty-looking stranger, who proves to be a prohibition officer just after you have offered him a life-saver.

We refer to the gentle critic!

We realize that this subject is about as new in these columns as the unveiling of a monument in a film weekly but, so many of these erring brethren have so steadfastly ignored fatherly advice and the wails of many victims to date, that the job must be done all over again.

Mostly because of recent and continued offenses.

And we easily could include other writers on film subjects. They are equally guilty.

The picture critic's job is made possible by the film industry; he is a writer and of the brotherhood of writers.

Does he then arise early in the morning, as a bridegroom going forth to dodge the rent man, in order to hurl exotics at his kind?

He does not.

Does he look with glowing interest, which he reflects in his writeups, upon the humor, art, style and positive genius exuding from our powerful original scenarios; or the angelic continuity of the heavenly-gifted adapter?

None of the family have mentioned it yet.

But the gentle critic—with exceptions as rare as income-tax exemptions—does glow about director and star, handing them the whole works.

Sometimes, probably through a slip, the critic acknowledges that the story is the cat's digestion, but the effort has proven so great his memory fails him completely as to the writer's name.

If the story is published fiction, he makes an exception to the rule, but the poor original writer and continuity bird constitute the invisible empire.

Yet the critic is a member of the same family, and screen writers are almost as human and honest as critics.

Despite the fact that photoplay writers and adapters have battled for years for ordinary recognition, the critic has not found it in his heart to aid him by the simple duty of visiting upon him plain justice.

The critic damns him, not with faint praise, but by nary a mention, oftentimes.

If he would only pause to kick the dog, he would at least admit that the poor critter existed.

War in Ireland?

Sure; they are after the critics.

"Only a Movie"

Without doubt the inquiring mind is a first aid to the writer. Cease to be a student and you soon fall behind the procession.

Film values are so profuse that the alert scenarist cannot complain of lack of a big and useful field. Observation of the screen itself is the college for advanced education needed by the successful photodramatist. The productions may be poor, good or supreme, but all teach valuable lessons.

Analysis of projected productions, with keen vision but no chip on the shoulder, should strengthen the regular's grasp upon future needs constantly.

The greatest lesson to be learned by screen writers of today and the needy future, undoubtedly is that of constructing stories which cannot be condemned as "movie" structures.

The phrase has been coined by the keen but scornful critic:

"They made a movie of it."

Artificial; the perverting of a natural tale!

Perhaps the most striking example of this failing may be found in that sterling production, "Blood and Sand." We saw the picture as first presented; as cut under the eyes of Director Fred Niblo and the masterly adapter, June Mathis. It was good to look upon.

"Blood and Sand" has returned—shorn.

A lengthy, valuable episode has been hacked away. We would not say that only head and legs remain, or that the production has been killed, for it is too vital to die even now; but—

"Blood and Sand" is now a "movie."

Our Own Interviews

"In reply to your inquiry as to where I get my ideas for scenarios, am submitting two examples, hoping, however, I am not violating professional ethics in giving trade secrets away.

"One day a peach from a neighbor's tree fell into my yard. It was my duty to return it, but I just love peaches. So I went into the house and wrote my latest special about the northwest mounted policeman who who was torn between love and duty. He got the peach about the same way I got mine.

"The first time I visited Ocean Park and saw the escaped artists' models, I had an inspiration which resulted in my famous super-feature entitled 'If You Couldn't Be Adam, Would You Consent to Be the Snake?'"

"Please get permission of the Guild before publishing the above.

"Fraternally,
"HECK HINKLE."

"Yes sir, I went to the show at the Bowl. It hapened this way. I thot I was buyin a lot on Hyland ave but found it was a tickett. I went there and when the Alpine guide left me I snek down from the top of Mt. Olive and saw the hole show. It was somethin about dreamy summer nights, probly wrote to advertise So. Calif. I jest want to say if I couldent rite a better skenario than that one I would go back greasin autoes.

"CRANKSHAFT JOE."

"So you want me to tell writers what's the matter with the films. I know. Monopoly; that's what. All the picture fnakers have bought up the modists and fashion czars. As a result the women now wear 'em so long that a blind man has as much fun on the street as anyone. Then what happens? Why, I have to give up good money to see Mae Mermaid lose 'em, Glaria Swansong putting 'em on, ingenues who don't give a darn, and comedy girls that never had 'em. It's nothing but a plot. That's what.

"BLUEMONA BLOOEY."

"I don't care for pictures. I can't read.
"DUSTY LANE."

Contemporary Criticisms

"THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD" (United Artists)

"Worthy to rank as one of the greatest pictures of the year. Mr. Arliss surpasses in sympathy and acting any of his previous characterizations. George Arliss . . . brings to the screen a story that is new, a theme as big as all humanity, and an acting company that renders seeing of the picture a sheer delight. Not excepting 'Disraeli' . . . Mr. Arliss by his fine sense of the dramatic, his quiet even poise, his tenderness and emotional strength, gives to the screen in 'The Man Who Played God' an entertainment of greater artistic worth than anything he has ever done before.

"His supporting company, from little Miriam Battista to the oldest member of the cast, is superb in every respect, and in the direction great credit reflects upon Harmon Weight. The story is smooth running, fast of action, the settings are more than excellent, and the lighting and photography are of an unusually high order.

"Margaret Seddon does a 'bit' that stands for thin cameo relief and makes a really big moment of a scene which less sincerely played might have proved merely incidental." — Exhibitors Herald.

"Excellent from every angle is 'The Man Who Played God' . . . Whether considered from the standpoint of star, story, cast, direction, technique, artistry, acting or general entertainment value, and doubly so because of its fine moral effect, this picture is a credit to the screen.

"Great credit is due to Harmon Weight for the manner in which he has directed this production. Art Director Clark Robinson and Photographer Harry Fischbeck have also done effective work." — Moving Picture World.

"It is a delightfully refreshing story that's off the beaten path of screen literature. Mr. Arliss gives us a characterization of wonderful appeal. 'The production has been excellently mounted in every detail, although the story is the thing here and lavish settings are not needed.

"The Yuletide spirit of the story is what makes the offering an especially valuable one for the midwinter season. Ann Forrest as the wife is as attractive as ever. The other players are adequate. It is excellently portrayed by a remarkable cast." — Motion Picture News.

"TIMOTHY'S QUEST"

(American)

"It is unfortunate that more stories like 'Timothy's Quest' have not been forthcoming. The story is delightful, possibly a little long in its present form, but nevertheless thoroughly absorbing all the way through.

"The New England settings are charming . . . and picturesque. The story itself is so refreshing that it no doubt will be a welcome offering, if only because of the fact that it is so far removed from the beaten track.

"Little Joseph Depey shows excellent quality in his work. . . . Baby Helen Rowland is a sympathetic little figure in the picture. Vivian Ogden has a role similar to the one that was given her as the old gossip in 'Way Down East,' and her performance in this is even superior." — Exhibitors Trade Review.

"It is Kate Douglas Wiggin's story fallible sympathy and charm. A gentle interpreted for the screen with an in-mixture of pathos and comedy, it offers delightful entertainment that scores because it is genuine.

"The screen version has avoided any too saccharine effect, and because of this merit it will surely win approval from the critical.

"There is no exception to the fine quality of the acting. Each character is defined with crystal clearness and invested with a sincerity that is largely responsible for the strong human appeal of the picture.

"Credit is due without stint to the director, Sidney Olcott. To the smallest detail he has equipped the delightfully old-fashioned scenes with an accurate knowledge of what is appropriate. The photography is excellent." — Moving Picture World.

"RAGS TO RICHES"

(Warner)

"There isn't a whole lot to be said about 'Rags to Riches' other than it is a fine picture, delightful entertainment and a wholly amusing feature. It doesn't matter that the story is the old conventional meller hokum. It is the way Wallace Worsley presents it and Wes Barry's presence that makes it a winning number.

"Worsley has handled the piece splendidly. He has kept the meller bits toned down and keeps the laughs coming.

"It isn't the story but Wes Barry that makes it a show. The supporting cast is adequate but not greatly important except for Niles Welch, who makes a pleasing hero." — Film Daily.

"It is a quality picture with a quantity of entertainment value that will be as highly appreciated on Broadway as it will be on Main street. It is human because every move of every actor is genuine, . . . because the story is simple, dealing with simple folks the world is ever happy to know . . . are among the living; because it is photographically well done and . . . because we see Wesley Barry in the role of an honest-to-goodness lad.

"In fact here's one production. . . that has everything. You can rip the picture to pieces, . . . and when you have completed your analysis you will have found that it is a great picture." — Moving Picture News.

"There is plenty of fun, a good dash of romance, some first rate melodrama, plenty of spirited action and suspense, and a slice of rural humanity—which all assembled make it a picture of quality. It is not a misstatement to declare that it is Wesley Barry's best feature, eclipsing 'School Days' in its power of appeal. It is a picture which never loses its grip upon the spectator—because it is honest, straightforward in its telling, sympathetic in its heart interest, and seasoned with sufficient humor.

"Hail to the young star who has not reached the stage where he must dominate every scene. Hail also to the title writer who has caught the true perspective of youth." — Motion Picture News.

"'Rags to Riches' is a Warner Brothers production brought into being by Harry Rapf from a story by Will Nigh and Walter DeLeon. As light entertainment, all it professes to be, it will well serve its purpose and more than please the average audience." — Exhibitors Herald.

Shakespeare's Return to a Censored World

BY GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

(In Universal City News)

HELL, Aug. 1.—Terrifically hot today. Read my new play last night to a jolly crowd composed of Sir Francis Bacon, Dante, Boccaccio, Dr. Johnson, that damn, swivelling Bosworth, Rabelais, the First Archbishop of Canterbury and the Devil. They unanimously agreed that it is the biggest thing I have ever done.

HELL, Aug. 2.—Met the Devil in the sulphur bath this morning and discussed my play. He has given me a year on earth to have the play produced. His Satanic Majesty is a hell of a good fellow.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Hotter than blazes here. Tried to get in to see Lee Shubert but he could not find time to talk to me. He says I'm a dead one. Have another big problem on my hands and it is imperative—When and How do I eat?

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—Got a job in a five-a-day picture house vaudeville but the agent tells me if my patter doesn't make good the first day out I go. I am learning the American vernacular. It is no more difficult than the vernacular of my time and has more strength. I rather admire it.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Made good in vaudeville. Used all the gags we used to use at the Tavern and began to think I was making a hit with new stuff. However, an usher wisecracked. Vaudeville audiences only laugh at the jokes they already know.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—No chance for my play. The managers won't even read it—they say I'm a box office failure. Abe Erlanger advises me to take my play to the picture producers. He says they'll take anything in pictures.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—The picture producers are hard-boiled to a man. They say I have no exploitation value. I told the outline of my play to one of them, and he said I had no sense of dramatic value.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—Carl Laemmle gave me a job today. They say he is a very enterprising man, given to daring innovations, and my eyes moistened with gratitude when he said, "I'll give you a chance, Mr. Shakespeare. Maybe you can learn the picture business and if you do I'll make your reputation." At last I have a chance.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Aug. 26.—So this is Universal City, the heart of the motion picture industry. Here is where my latest and I think my best play may be produced. I am thrilled to the core. Have spent the day waiting to see Mr. Thalberg.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Aug. 27.—I have met the boys in the scenario department. They are a fine crowd and most of them know me by reputation, although I can see that their kindly attitude toward me is inspired more by pity than by admiration. But why do they smile when they say that I must first sell the idea of my play to Irving Thalberg? I spent the day waiting to see him.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Aug. 28.—Spent the day in Mr. Thalberg's reception room. He is a pleasant chap. I met him in the crowd early in the morning and he said he would see me in a few minutes. Perhaps he meant Monday morning.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Aug. 29.—Sunday. Went to a "wild party" last night but left early, and much bored. How did Hollywood get its scandal publicity?

It was like a prayer meeting as compared to the simplest of the affairs my crowd used to attend. No wonder hell is so tame in these modern days.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Jan. 4.—Saw Mr. Thalberg today and had a wonderful talk with him lasting fully twenty minutes. It was worth spending five months in his reception room; but I feel that I might have accomplished more had I not been interrupted by Miss Howell, Bernie Hyman, Julius Bernheim, Murphy Stallings, Fred Datig, Ray Schrock, Nat Ross, Bill Younger, Tod Browning, Erich von Stroheim and that sterling director of publicity, Malcolm Boylan, each of whom dropped in for a moment on urgent business. Nevertheless, I feel sure that Mr. Thalberg has a very comprehensive idea of my play and will talk with me about it tomorrow. I am greatly encouraged.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Feb. 12.—Mr. Thalberg has read my play! He is very enthusiastic about it. He says, however, that all the dramatic situations are censorable and that it will take a lot of work to supply an entire new drama to take the place of the situations which must be eliminated. Also, he wants the lead character altered so that Lon Chaney can play it. Also, he wants more comedy injected and a spectacular finish—but not a forest fire nor the bursting of a dam, nor an earthquake, nor a volcanic eruption, nor any of the things which have been recently used. I shall do as he suggests. I never produced a play without at least this amount of alteration—so the task does not seem at all appalling—but I wish to high heaven that I could find some good ale.

UNIVERSAL CITY, March 2.—I have finished the task. I have introduced the midnight murder in the old sawmill, the stolen bank bonds, the mortgage on the old homestead, the detective of superior deductive powers who works without whiskers, a copiously wrinkled mother, amnesia, mistaken identity, and the righting of a cruel wrong. I have changed every character in the play to fit actors available and in stock. I have altered the illegitimate child to a pet Angora cat on account of the censorship. I have made the rape on the castle stairs a proposal of marriage which is repulsed with scorn. I have made the heavy drop dead with heart disease. I have injected comedy with the aid of a fat boy and two gossips; and I have had the last sequence laid in a rattlesnake pit with the juvenile and the ingenu saved from the fangs of the poisonous reptiles by the eruption of an unsuspected oil well, which makes them rich. The oil, catching fire, overflows down the mountain side, sparing all the virtuous people and consumes all the heavies, with the exception of the lead heavy, who drops dead just as the juvenile and the ingenu, rushing from the scene of the holocaust, fall plump into the arms of an Episcopalian minister with a flat bowler hat, who marries them forthwith, thus giving a light touch to the finish. I fancy that I have done a very neat piece of embroidery.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Friday 13th.—My script is a huge success. I am being congratulated on every hand. They all say it will make a perfect movie. This is what I had feared. I am going back to hell!

FINIS.

Roger Manning is managing the C. C. Burr studio, Glendale, Long Island.

Dick Friel is back from his camp in the Maine woods.

Lillian Gish has gone over to Inspiration Pictures. Her first picture will be "The White Sister," which will be made in Italy, and directed by Henry King.

Margaret Sangster, well-known writer, brought suit last week in the U. S. District Court against the Fox Film corporation, which she charges with copyright infringement of her scenario, "The Island of Faith." Miss Sangster will move this week for a temporary injunction restraining the Fox company from exhibiting the picture entitled "The New Teacher."

Bob Vignola will make a tour of the world before starting his next picture.

Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, "Robin Hood," will be the opening feature for George M. Cohan's Grand Opera House in Chicago. To date the "Grand" has been devoted to plays, but because of the lack of interest Mr. Cohan is changing its policy.

Mr. Rothapfel is giving a private showing of "The Old Homestead" to over 1500 clergymen of all denominations at the Palace theatre. This showing is previous to the initial public showing which begins next week at the Capital.

William Travers Jerome's perfected colored motion picture was given a private showing this week at the Simplex projection rooms. Charles Dana Gibson and a party of friends voted it a great success.

Gordon Edwards, director, returned from Palestine last week after having completed one of the most hazardous and colossal motion pictures ever undertaken, "The Shepherd King," a story dealing with the life of "David."

Harry Walker, theatrical producer, has inserted a morality clause in all contracts for girls. It reads: The party of the 2d part agrees to conduct herself in a ladylike manner at all times, etc.; in the event of a violation of this clause, party of the 2d part shall forfeit her last week's salary and receive, instead, transportation back to New York.

Corrine Griffith will leave this week for Hollywood to make a Vitagraph picture.

"Poodles" Hannaford, of the Sells-Floto Circus, has signed a contract to appear in Lou Anger-Joe Schenck comedies. He will start in Hollywood about December 1st.

Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein, widow of the late impresario, ran the following advertisement in all of the N. Y. dailies this morning: "Must have work of any sort. Phone Fitzroy 3224. Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein." She said she was advertising for work because she had no money whatever and must do something to keep alive. Mrs. Hammerstein just recently lost the Manhattan Opera House, the largest theatre in New York City.

Our Travelog

Going

Frank Urson, staff director for Mr. Neilan; David Kesson, cameraman, and other members of the company sailed for England Friday, on the Berengaria, to take some of the scenes for "Tess" in the natural locale. In this they will have the co-operation of Thomas Hardy.

Dallas FitzGerald, director of the Belasco productions, left with his company last Monday for San Francisco, where he is completing scenes for his special feature. Forrest Stanley, Miriam Cooper, Richard Tucker, Michael Lewis and Kate Lester have the leading roles.

Following a preview of his latest production, "The Purple Dawn," Charles R. Seeling left the Fine Arts studios this week for New York, where he is to arrange for the picture's distribution.

Henry McCarty, author and director of western stories starring Lester Cuneo, has completed the continuity for the company's latest five-reeler, and will leave the Fine Arts studios in a few days for Keen's Camp, where exterior scenes for the picture will be shot. Cuneo has the role of a French-Canadian.

Robert Florey, French journalist, will leave Hollywood, October 24, for Europe, where he will have charge of the publicity campaign in behalf of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." He will accompany Clarence Ericson, who will act as business manager of the tour of this production abroad.

Ernest Torrence has gone to Utah and Nevada to make "The Covered Wagon" for Lasky.

Coming

Katherine MacDonald and her supporting company, including Orville Caldwell, Stuart Holmes, Lincoln Stedman, Adele Farrington, Edith Lyel, Russell Gordon and Grace Morse, have returned from Arrowhead Lake, where important scenes were filmed by Victor Schertzinger for "The Scarlet Lily."

Walter Emerson has just received official notification of final settlement of his father's estate, which means he will soon be in possession of a large share of a 180,000-acre Montana ranch.

Alan Hale, now in Milford, Nevada, playing in the Lasky production of "Covered Wagon," under the direction of James Cruze, has received an offer to go to Germany to play the stellar role in a big Lubitch production.

George Rigas narrowly escaped drowning near Santa Monica, Monday, when he tested the feasibility of newly invented pontoon shoes. The shoes failed to sustain the actor and as he sank an undertow carried him out. He was rescued by other bathers.

Gaston Glass, now playing the title role in "The Hero," will appear in Judge McCormick's court on November 28, to press his suit for $15,000 damages against the Pacific Electric company, which he holds responsible for injuries he received when a street car crashed into his automobile last December in Hollywood.

The Little Bird Says:

Roy Miller pulled the best press agent story of the year, last week.

Excited residents in the vicinity of a recent mysterious murder telephoned Los Angeles police headquarters that a grotesque figure wearing English hunting cap was lurking in the neighborhood, peering through a magnifying glass at the sidewalk.

Arrested, the stranger would say nothing except that he was "Sherlock Holmes."

The Examiner carried a two-column picture with a three-column headline, and the Times used a news freak on it.

"Sherlock Holmes" opened at the California theater and Roy Miller went away on a vacation.

The publicity Purveyor's talents have a new outlet. Gerald B. Breitigam, John Golden's press agent, not only writes boys' adventure novels, "The Radio Boys," but he gives readings from them over the Westinghouse Newark broadcasting station.

Harry Reichenbach is now working under an ideal incentive for any press agent. He gets a percentage of the gross of the shows he handles. He is now handling three legitimate shows—"The Endless Chain," "East Side, West Side," and "On the Stairs"—in New York.

There's a case of mistaken screen identity in Berlin. An old Frank Mayo picture showed there, and the critics declared the star was Eric von Stroheim under an assumed name. Von Stroheim, it is said, is in bad with Austrian theatergoers for his burlesques of the German army officer. They also disclaim his right to use "von," the title sign of nobility.

The P. A.'s Friends

The Albany (N. Y.) News started publication the evening of October 10.

Norinne Winthrow, former drama critic of the Lansing (Mich.) Capital News, is now on the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

The Huntington (Pa.) Journal has been consolidated with the News.

Alexander Woolcott has resigned as drama critic of the New York Times to join the Herald. His successor is not named, but John Corbin is mentioned as a possibility.

Burns Mantle has resigned as dramatic critic of the New York Mail to rejoin the Chicago Tribune. He will revive the dramatic department of the New York News, the daily tabloid affiliated with the Chicago paper. James Craig is his successor on the Mail.

Lawrence Reamer is critic for the New York Evening Sun, with Stephen Rathbun as assistant.

The Buffalo (N. Y.) News is issuing a Saturday tabloid section, including drama and motion picture news and news pictures.

The Worcester (Mass.) Sunday Times suspended publication after three issues. No money.

The Utica (N. Y.) Press has increased to two Saturday theatrical pages.

Four Years Ago in Hollywood

(From Camera! of October 27, 1918)

Bessie Love is vacationing at Arrowhead. Prince Axel of Denmark visited Charlie Chaplin last week.

Nell Shipman will end her contract with Vitagraph November 1.

Charles Ray will finish his feature at Ince studio Monday or Tuesday.

Ora Carew has some retakes to do with Tom Moore at Triangle studio.

Charlie Chaplin begins work Monday on a picture of village atmosphere.

Brentwood Film corporation leases Mona studio at 4811 Fountain avenue.

The first gold star in Universal's service flag honors Lawrence Peyton, leading man.

Bebe Daniels made camphor bags for the members of the Rolin company to ward off the flu.

Marshall Neilan rushed with the Blanche Sweet company to film a forest fire on Mount Lookout.

Kingsley Benedict, Universal scenario writer, will support Carmel Myers in "The Beautiful Mongrel."

Al Ray has won a prize in an eastern camera magazine for a picture he took of Winifred Westover.

Bobby Vernon, hospital attendant at the submarine base, took two weeks' furlough to collect for Liberty loans.

King Vidor cast Helen Jerome Eddy's own mother as her screen mother in the first Brentwood film, "The Turn in the Road."

Harold Lloyd entertained with a musicale at his home. Among those present were Dorothy Wolbert, Mr. and Mrs. Hal Roach, Marie Marquette, Bebe Daniels and her mother.

Oscar L. Horn writes of arrival in France with 143d field artillery of Jack Jaccard, Wheeler Oakman, Art Acord, Hank Mann, Kenneth Harlan, Buster Keaton and Aaron Edwards.

Frances Guihan entertained in honor of Prince and Princess Troubetsky at Marcel's. Among her guests were Dagmar Godowski, Nicholas Bunaow, Mr. and Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa.

Kitty Gordon, Jack Wilson, Charley Pike, Monte Katterjohn, A. E. Thomas, William Lord Wright, Billie Allen, Harry Mestayer, Fannie Ward, Lee Ochs, Dorothy Gish, Louis Gasnier, George Fitzmaurice, Tony Moreno, Julian Eltinge and Mabel Condon gathered at Grauman's to preview a William Russell picture Monday. The film was missing. Fitzmaurice went in search, while Charlie Chaplin played the organ. It couldn't be found, so Fannie Ward invited the company to her home. Next day Fitzmaurice found the film in the side pocket of his car.

CAMERA!

—listen, all you who are lured by the screen—

POOR little girls who crave luxury and long for adulation! And who hope for both through some magic enchantment exercised by a course in Motion Picture Acting and Make-up!

Even were the $15 courses accomplishing their purported purpose of adequately training actors and actresses, even if these actors and actresses were highly successful in securing engagements and in making good, even then the luxury and the adulation would be things far away.

* * *

Million-dollar salaries!

There was only one person in California whose income exceeded $1,000,000 last year, and that person was not connected with motion pictures. The next most prosperous person received something like $800,000, and the third, about $400,000. A dozen or so exceeded $100,000 a year income.

Yet California is the residence of Chaplin and Fairbanks and Mary Pickford and Nazimova. Of Charles Ray and Cecil DeMille and Harold Lloyd. Of their salaries fabulous sums are mouthed.

But they couldn't all be the $800,000 person.

* * *

The adoration of hundreds of thousands! What does it amount to?

When a theaterful in Wichita bursts into applause at your screen appearance, will you be there to hear? When a coolie in Singapore rolls his tongue at your loveliness, will you know of the homage? When a school girl in Calgary pins your picture on her bedroom wall, will you feel a thrill of triumph?

Though you face the world from a thousand screens, your reward may be but a newspaper adjective or two, that flung in return for paid advertising.

But the thousands who will know you by sight—what of them? Ruth Roland, whose face is known around the globe, walked down Sixth street, Los Angeles, at noon the other day. The hustling hundreds gave no more heed to her than to the brisk, well-clothed office worker at her shoulder—unknowing that she elbowed a star.

* * *

That pale, dark beauty in a convent in Quebec, that jolly flapper in Duluth, that blond waitress in Fort Worth, each is lured by lying messages from the callous movie school promoters. How the studios seek new talent, how the directors trudge the streets scanning the crowds for new faces, how scouts from the producers haunt the "classrooms" where camera make-up and gesture are taught—such are glowing tales that entice new victims to the doors that thousands have passed through, to—what?

* * *

Well, 1920 was not such a bad year for film production. The government census that year showed 2289 actors and 1311 actresses in Los Angeles. Altogether, 3600. And that included professionals of the theaters and cabarets.

Most of the faces of 1920 are still on the screen in 1922.

Yet in the interim, at the most conservative reckoning of one "instructor," he has graduated 1872 "players." There have been an average of four schools operating, let us say (to be exceedingly conservative). At least twice the number of actual, active players have been "trained" and "graduated." Where are they? Not on any screen.

* * *

The successful people of the screen won their places by hard work and long and arduous training that started in childhood in most cases. They are on the screen to stay, but they well know and observe the stringent routine that is the price of their staying there.

Breakfasts in bed, fleets of motor cars, orgies of shopping, bacchanalian entertainments . . . they're all in the picture. But not in the players' lives.

Alarm clock at 7, vigorous daily dozens, substantial breakfasts, weary pouring over scripts and stories, the hustle into make-up, weary waits on the sets, tedious takes and retakes before the camera, beans and coffee at noon, more work, a session in the projection room viewing monotonous rushes, a simple supper, bed. That comes closer to the life the players lead.

It's not a game for luxury-lovers. It's not a game to be taught in six or sixty lessons. It's not a game in which friendship will go far—without talent, "the goods," behind it. It's a lifetime's work. No faker can help you. Beat off their clutching hands.

TED TAYLOR.

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

"The White Frontier," by Jeffry de Prend; starring Dorothy Phillips; director, Allen Holubar. United.

Fred Niblo has started production on "The Famous Mrs. Fair," for L. B. Mayer.

Production will commence at the Harry Garson studios within the next few weeks on the third of a series of Clara Kimball Young feature-productions to be released through Metro exchanges.

Work on Fatty Karr's first story, "Weight for Me," started this week at the Federal studios under the direction of Bruce Mitchell.

Detective stories, written by George Bronson Howard as "The Further Exploits of Yorke Norrey," are being filmed at Universal City with Roy Stewart as the star. Duke Worne is directing. The first story gives Stewart an interesting supporting cast of Lucille Ricksen, Fontaine LaRue, Jack Perrin and Hayden Stevenson.

"VANITY FAIR" BALLIN'S NEXT PRODUCTION

Hugo Ballin has arrived in California where he will produce Thackeray's novel, "Vanity Fair," for Goldwyn. Mabel Ballin will play Becky Sharp.

His reputation does not rely on his freckles. Wesley Barry is without them in "Rags to Riches."

Robert T. Thornby, who is directing "The Drivin' Fool," featuring Wally Van, has completed his cast for the picture. Arrangements were recently made by E. D. Newman, head of the Regent Pictures company, to produce "The Drivin' Fool" at the Christie studios.

The preparation of "The Abysmal Brute," Jack London's vivid pen pictures of the faults and virtues of the prize ring, for screening as a Universal special all-star production, has been completed. It will go into production at Universal City within two weeks. A. P. Younger wrote the scenario. Hobart Henley will direct.

GIBSON TO DIRECT WILLARD MACK

Willard Mack will star in a story written by the author-actor for himself. Mack is author of "Kick In," recently made by Paramount, "Tiger Rose," a Belasco success, and other stage successes.

Tom Gibson will direct "Red Bulldogs" at the Long Beach studios. Mr. Gibson just completed the production of "The Web of the Law" and will use his organization in the Willard Mack production.

TULLY TO SCREEN "TRILBY"

Richard Walton Tully's next production will be a screen version of Du Maurier's novel, "Trilby." Guy Bates Post will star in the role of Svengali. James Young will direct and the picture will be released through First National. Tully is at present in Paris where he will superintend the presentation of his stage play, "The Bird of Paradise."

Irving Cummings held a special preview on "Chicago Sal" at the United studios for Mr. and Mrs. Sol Lesser, who recently returned from New York.

Complete

"The Web of the Law," Texas Ranger production at Long Beach studio, starring Patricia Palmer and Bill Miller. Director, Tom Gibson; cameraman, Elmer Dyer.

"Shadows," B. P. Schulberg production, directed by Tom Forman; star, Lon Chaney. Al. Lichtman release.

"The Purple Highway," Kenma production, directed by Henry Kolker, starring Madge Bellamy; Rufus Steele production manager.

"The Scarlet Lily," Katherine MacDonald's starring vehicle for First National release; Victor Schertzinger, director.

Edwin Carewe has finished actual shooting at the Biograph studios in New York City on his first independent picture for First National release, and is now cutting. His next production will be made here, it is reported.

"An Old Sweetheart of Mine," the Independent Harry Garson production based on the poem by James Whitcomb Riley and starring Elliott Dexter and Helen Jerome Eddy, has just reached completion at the Harry Garson studio in Edendale.

Baby Peggy has completed her production of "The Theatre" at the Century studios. J. Travers Montgomery, who acts as co-director with Alf Goulding in the direction of the Baby Peggy Comedies, is now busily engaged in preparing a new story.

TITLE CHANGES

"Paths of Glory" to "The World's Applause." Directed by William deMille for Lasky.

"Sacrifice" to "Drums of Destiny," starring Mary Miles Minter, directed by Charles Maigne for Lasky.

"The Kidnappers" to "The Scarlet Car" (Universal).

T. R. Coffin productions and Clarence Bricker productions, which companies have been actively engaged in film production for the past three years, have consolidated and will henceforth operate under the name of Popular Pictures, Incorporated. By combining their productions systems bigger and better pictures may be expected from the men behind the organization. Production quarters have been established at the Federal studios.

James Marcus' "Toby Tyler" or "Ten Weeks with a Circus" is to be Jackie Coogan's next production. Eddie Cline is engaged to direct the production. Mr. Cline has been responsible for all of Buster Keaton's biggest successes.

Truth About the Schools

NOTE

Anyone who has had any dealings with acting and make-up schools—or with any registration bureau or stock-selling or co-operative motion picture producing scheme affiliated with a school—is invited to place their experiences in Camera!'s hands. A thorough probe of the conduct of those places is under way. Three men, who advertised themselves as casting directors, and made themselves offensive to girls and women (C. P. Stevens, Fred Snell and Louis Harper), are now serving jail sentences. Others will follow when sufficient evidence is obtained against them.—EDITOR.

BY MISS X

MOTION PICTURES—I want, immediately, 26 women over 18 years and 14 men over 20 years with good wardrobe; $7.50 to $15 a day. 418 Chamber of Commerce Bldg.

I went to rooms 418-19 in the Chamber of Commerce building in answer to an ad similar to the foregoing. My ad called for 32 young men and women over 20 to work in motion pictures "500 to 750."

One man was sitting at a desk, but I was shown to another man. He told me to go across the street to room 308, Mason Opera House building and see a Mr. Pollo there. He wrote the directions on the back of a business card, the face of which read:

Picture Players' Exchange

Ben Goldstein, Manager

The card indicated a rushing business for it listed two "day telephones," Pico 5887 and Pico 4835; and one "night telephone," Washington 438.

I thought that must be Mr. Goldstein sitting at the desk, so I spoke to him.

"From your ad I inferred you wanted some one to invest in the business, and that I would be given work," I said.

Mr. Goldstein sized up the clipping, then looked at me.

"Yes. I'll tell you what I'll do," he said. "I'll get you a part in a picture, I'll guarantee steady work for a year, if you will put $25,000 into the company."

I went across the street to room 308. On the door was inscribed the words:

"Screen Land"

I entered and asked for Jack Pollo.

One of Mr. Pollo's first questions was:

"Have you seen Camera?"

"What camera?" I asked, in surprise.

"Oh you haven't seen it, then. Well, it's a movie magazine here. It's exposing the cooperative pitcher concerns. That's a good thing, too. Take my advice and never invest any money in these cooperative outfits."

Mr. Pollo told me I would have to take ten lessons for $15, and that I would get four to six days' work a week as soon as he started producing.

His incorporation papers would be back from Sacramento in a month, he explained. (I have since learned that these papers have been in Sacramento two months, now.)

Then all he had to do was to raise $50,000 cash, and production would start. Investors were absolutely protected, as the state would have an examiner look after expenditures every month.

"I'll have a part written into the picture for you if you invest," said Pollo.

He assured me that no contracts are given to anyone but the star, however.

"When we do give out contracts, the actors are usually offered more money and break their contracts," he explained. "Then we producers are left in the lurch."

An advantage of taking lessons from him, Mr. Pollo explained, was that one could register at the Picture Players exchange, merely paying monthly dues. Ben Goldstein would do the casting for Screen Land corporation as soon as they got their papers, he said.

* * *

A woman who plays character parts in pictures right along called on Goldstein and registered in his Picture Players' exchange. She told me he charged $1 for registration. A payment of $2 was to put her on the preferred list, with dues $1 a month afterwards.

Six months passed, during which no work was procured by the registration bureau, although the woman regularly played in parts secured by her own efforts.

"How much would you give me for three days' work a week at $10 a day?" Goldstein finally asked her. He suggested that such a guarantee of work might be worth $50 to her.

A young man who followed up an ad to 211 Mason Opera House building when Goldstein had his office there (he moved across the street to the Chamber of Commerce building only a few weeks ago), told me he was sent up to room 308, on the next floor. He recognized Jack Pollo as a man associated with M. J. Lynch in the Apollo Film company, another notorious school of acting and makeup.

* * *

In most swindles the ones who can least afford it are the ones who lose the most. In her frantic efforts to obtain her opportunity on the screen, the woman who tells the following story spent $30.50 ("a lot of money, to one who has none"), and came into contact with a great many of the "school" men and their aides:

FROM childhood I was considered fine in dramatics. I was also very good in singing—but I won't dwell on my qualifications, especially on myself.

"About the first of the year I enrolled in Mr. Pollo's class, 319 Grosse building. He and Mr. M. Lynch were partners, but separated about that time to go to Mason Opera House building.

"I paid $10 for my course of make-up, but was left to Mr. Lynch's supervision and he, knowing I had registered with Mr. Pollo, I got my knowledge by looking on.

"I then went to Mr. Pollo and paid $1 to register in a preferred class with Mr. Goldstein.

"Still, I received no work.

"I registered with Mr. King on South Olive in preferred list, and no more. He told me Mr. Lynch was straight, and to go back and leave my picture, which I did.

"Yesterday I registered in preferred list in Mr. Snyder's office, between Sixth and Seventh streets on South Olive, and he promised work from a week to ten days from now.

"Last week I paid Mr. Crawford, at Santa Monica and Bronson avenue (Caswell studio), $7.50, and went out on a tryout in Laurel Canyon. He told my friend (she also invested), that we were both very good. My friend and I both went to Fourth and Main streets to answer the usual ad for inexperienced people. That man ran everybody else down but himself (Gaylord productions).

"Yes, this was a class for $25. You simply got a tryout for that much.

"They say if you have money enough to slip to a director you can get in."

This is the fifth in Camera!'s series of articles exposing the methods of the schools of movie acting and make-up. Camera!'s declaration of war on fake schools was made September 30. The October 7 article dealt with Scripture Films, Inc., and the "film exchange" at 643 South Olive street; October 14, with the Hollywood Film company, the Apollo Film company, and the Classic Film Actors agency; October 21, with the Fashion-Industrial Film company. Back numbers can be obtained for 10 cents each at Camera!'s office.

FOR the information of readers, Camera! herewith lists schools of motion picture acting and make-up and other film activities advertising in the classified sections of Los Angeles papers. Letters are invited from any readers who have had experience with these enterprises.

JACK POLO, 308 Mason Opera house building. Wants refined men and women for steady work if right type. Exchanges prospects with Goldstein, Chamber of Commerce.

BENNY GOLDSTEIN, 418 Chamber of Commerce building. Last call was for 40 persons with good wardrobe to make $7.50 to $15 a day. Exchanges prospects with Polo, Mason Opera house.

Current Reviews

"Forget-Me-Not"

WHILE producers were spending millions on spectacular costumed productions in an effort to make the public gasp, Louis Burstson was supervising a picture whose main object is to depict life as it is lived and not as we like to think it was lived centuries ago. "Forget-Me-Not" is very simply produced. The action is simple and situations are anything but forced. The story has many new twists and is heavy with real life drama. For four reels the appeal and interest never ceases, but the fifth reel slows down to a convenient ending.

There is one false note which many times bobs up without cause, in the form of subtitles that, in an effort to explain the drama, spoiled the dramatic climaxes.

Never before has Bessie Love been so well cast, and never before has she played a part so convincingly. As the orphan girl she twisted everyone about her little finger. And later her heavier work was that of a finished actress.

Gareth Hughes, too, was well cast. He did his best work in the first few reels as the orphan boy.

Otto Lederer was a beloved character as the fake blind man.

Irene Hunt as the young mother played her role with skill.

Myrtle Lind had only a few scenes in which she pleased.

The direction by F. W. VanDyke was handled well, and interpreted Burt Clymer's continuity in a clear, understandable way.

There are many new photographic effects that by their use saved titles in many places. The straight photography is beautiful and carefully handled.

But the title writer ought to have been fired before he got his hands on the film to inject various discords into a good piece of film.

"The Country Flapper"

AMONG other recent inanities "The Country Flapper" heads the list. Someone tacked an opening title on the film to the effect that this picture has no plot. But that alibi has been worked overtime of late and a little originality, such as announcing that the film has no continuity, would not only be welcome but its veracity could never be questioned after the viewing.

Instead of making burlesque characters, as, no doubt, was attempted, the members of the cast were either made or make themselves idiotic in action.

One of the great horrors is the would-be funny titles. Unless a title contains a rasping pun it has no place in this grand flop.

Dorothy Gish is a disappointment. And that is not all, she is tiring with her continual mugging at the camera and unsuccessful efforts to be funny in slapstick.

Glen Hunter is lost in the imbecilic maze, but one or two close-ups gives us the idea that he is an actor in spite of his misfortune is being badly cast.

Mildred Marsh, Harlan Knight, Tommy Douglas, Raymond Hackett, Albert Hackett and Catherine Collins complete the cast.

"The Old Homestead"

IF bringing back the humble, homely things of the rural past, in natural lights and shadows, constitutes a successful screen production in these days of jazz, speedy living and nudeness in dramatic thought, then Paramount must be credited with a neat victory in the presentation of "The Old Homestead."

There is only one trouble with revivals. The older generation is pleased but critical, for it is viewing familiar themes, while the youngsters are heard to murmur something about "old stuff," even as they admire photography, characterization and manner of presentation.

But it probably would prove highly unsatisfactory all around to try modern improvements on one-horse shays, and as difficult as teaching old Bruno new tricks.

Therefore, if Theodore Roberts had not used too freely of his bag of tricks in this entirely lovable story, the role of Josh Whitcomb probably would have pleased old and young just a trifle more.

And if some of the city scenes were not quite so noticeably "sets," the captious would be robbed of the pleasure of picking flaws.

However, "The Old Homestead" cannot be but welcome everywhere not only for its own worth, but as a decided relief from sex slush and the tidal wave of costume stuff which seems to be swamping the screen at present.

Theodore Roberts uplifts the presentation splendidly, but is forced to divide honors with George Fawcett, Fritz Ridgway and the persons responsible for the remarkable storm effects.

Mr. Fawcett is masterful at all times as "Eph Holbrook," the man who is so severely "just," but he contributes one little scene which stands out decidedly when he forgives the son who has wrought so much misery.

Miss Ridgway, as "Ann," is so entirely natural that she adds much to her established reputation as a good screen artist.

Harrison Ford as "Reuben" is creditable in the role. T. Roy Barnes as "Happy Jack" the tramp, suffers the handicap of crepe hair and a makeup that would call for smiles if he did not fight it down with good interpretation.

Kathleen O'Connor, Ethel Wales, E. J. Brady, Frank Hayes, Z. Wall Covington, Charles Williams and James Mason fit into this rural background faithfully and hold their own in a cast of strength.

James Cruze, the director, has given us his best, and Karl Brown's photography is magnificent and extremely creditable.

"What's Wrong With the Women?"

ONE consolation brought forth in "What's Wrong With the Women?" is, that there is more wrong with the film than the women in it.

The story and direction are wholly to blame for a conglomeration called a production.

Daniel Carson Goodman overestimated the screen value of his story when he thought to transfer life's eternal question to the silversheet. In the first place, he has only started a picture and left numerous loose ends hanging in midair.

If there were a point of interest visible, or if the cast of heretofore capable players had been handled right, there could be hope that at least this film would not cause a general walkout from sheer boredom.

What the eminent author has overlooked in making a stupid production, R. William Neil has supplied.

His actors overact, misinterpret or don't act at all.

Barbara Castleton, a noted actress, has the misfortune to play the leading feminine role. She is supposed to be a brainy woman and a mother, but the author has made her a weak person that follows the slightest suggestion that would lead her feet astray. She is far below her average.

Rod La Roque, who under favorable circumstances is a good actor, is also made ridiculous.

No moral picture attempt is complete without its allegorical figure hovering in the background with hand raised in constant benediction. That figure is present here, but does not make it complete.

Julia Swaine Gordon acts with the same maternal unconcern as movie mothers do. Her work was not so bad because there was less of it.

Huntly Gordon, ordinarily a leading man, was merely given a small role, and Constance Bennett had a glorious time overacting in a situation where a little repression would be welcome.

Hedda Hopper, Paul McAllister and William Lackaye completed the cast.

Photography was only ordinary.

Pickups By The Staff

WOODS-BUCHANAN-HARRIS

Great interest among picture folk awaits further announcements from Frank E. Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris, who have announced their affiliation for independent production.

Woods resigned from the Lasky organization, of which he has been supervisor of productions, a week after Buchanan did.

Lucien Hubbard has been engaged as one of a staff of four production advisory editors at Lasky. Other members of this staff are Ralph Block, Julia Crawford Ivers and Walter Woods. Hubbard will take up his duties November 1.

Dick Sutherland, remembered as the tramp in "Grandma's Boy," says if you are in doubt, or worried about your future, consult him, as he feels competent to advise you after having played the clairvoyant in Carter De Haven's latest production, "False Alarm."

Edward J. Montagne, associate editor of the Selznick scenario department, has written a one-act sketch which will be presented by the Screen Writers' Guild at their frolic during November. The sketch is entitled "In the Roaring Forties," and is a comedy drama of New York life.

Henry B. Walthall has started a tour of the Orpheum circuit in a psychological mystery drama entitled "The Unknown."

Louise Fazenda has been engaged to feature in Educational comedies for the Jack White company.

Long Beach Notes

Work has started on John P. Mills productions. The first one will be a six-reel feature written by Harry Northrup and co-directed by Rex Thorpe, while E. G. Dyer will have complete charge of photographing the picture. The picture will be released under the title of "Black Gold."

"The Marriage Chance" has been completed and shipped east to be released by the American Releasing Corp. Hampton Del Ruth is busy preparing his next story for production that will start some time in November. It will be another all-star cast.

The Ranger productions have finished titling their first five-reel featuring Patricia Palmer and Ranger Bill Miller. The picture will be released under the title of "The Web of the Law." The story is by Tom Gibson and Elmer Dyer.

Milburn Morante, director of the Morante producing corporation, has returned from a trip to New York where he has been in the interest of the company.

Actors' Equity to Boost Initiation Fee

The Pacific Coast office of the Actors' Equity association has received formal notification from New York headquarters that commencing on December 1st the initiation fee will be raised from five to twenty-five dollars, excepting to those applicants who are engaged in tent shows, repertoire companies, boat shows, tabloid productions and those who apply as beginners or junior members. To these classes the initiation will be ten dollars, or an advance of one hundred per cent. The yearly dues are to be eighteen dollars per year for all classes, commencing November 1st.

WANTS 20 COMEDIES

R. H. Clark, scenario editor of Golden Rocks Films, Inc., is in Los Angeles seeking twenty stories, 2-reel, for short comedies. He plans six kiddie comedies, ten of the usual topical appeal, and four made especially for Latin-America.

Abl Ortoz, who is back of the company, owns twelve theaters in South America. The Arcadia studio is a reconstructed dancing hall at Eddy and Johns street, San Francisco. The comedies will be directed by Bert Hall there.

Keen's Camp, near Hemet, will serve for the opening shots in Henry McCarty's latest western story, "The Vengeance of Pierre," starring Lester Cuneo. The company left the Fine Arts studios last week and expect to be gone about ten days. Cuneo has the role of a French-Canadian.

Following an illness of several weeks, Alfred P. Hamberg, former production manager for Reginald Barker films, and well known for his association with the motion picture industry in various capacities, died Wednesday.

Ralph Faulkner has returned to Hollywood after suffering injuries received during the filming, "The Man From Glengarry," an Ernest Shipman production.

Alan Hale, who was injured in an aeroplane wreck when he attempted to fly from Milford, Utah, to Hollywood in time to attend the premier of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at Grauman's new theatre, is now out of the hospital.

Outlines Plan for Freelance League

Winona Boutree, in Camera! September 23, protested against the unbusinesslike handling in many studios of submitted manuscripts, and suggested that some plan be evolved for presenting the right play to the right producer at the right time.

A Pennsylvania freelance writer, who omitted to sign his name, presented an idea so interesting that the no-anonymous-letters rule was suspended for one time. He proposed in Camera! October 14 (Writers' number) a league for freelance writers with a staff competent to put a valuable idea into play form, then sell it to the producer.

Now Mr. Parker unbottles a few preliminary organization ideas and indicates he has more.

Camera! will gladly serve as forum for the freelancers of America if they wish action on this matter.

BY L. HERVEY PARKER

LET me express my hearty appreciation of your action in taking the lead in exposing fakers in the line of acting and make-up schools.

Also my especial commendation in regard to the article concerning "A League for Freelancers." It seems to me that you have started something that should go a long way. If I could spare the time just now, I would jump into the suggested job with both feet and hands and a checkbook.

That job, as I see it, would consist in some such line-up of activities as this:

1. Get together enough interested freelancers to raise a fund big enough to give that quoted bulletin wide publicity and couple with it a strong invitation for everyone under the sun, who bore claim to the title Freelance Writer for the Screen, to write in and state their willingness to aid the development of such a league and to receive printed information concerning the tentative plans already drafted by the original group. I would have this original group be a representative one and give their names. There should be some ex-studio writers now freelancing, also some students of as wide a range of scenario schools as we could contact.

2. The initial group should have the plan of organization drafted, with the inclusion of eventually going into independent production for the members of the league if at some future time it seemed advisable.

3. The original framers should be bonded (and the bond published) for the handling of the funds resulting from the next step—the raising of a fund large enough to put the whole thing over by generous and continuous publicity (handled by a reliable national advertising agency for the sake of proper rates) in all of the writers' magazines and as many other likely fields as the response rendered available.

The amount necessary to do this RIGHT should be figured and stated as a goal and be the sum for which the framers were bonded. Emphasis would be laid on the fact that if an insufficient sum was raised for this publicity campaign all contributions would be returned. With properly written publicity the appeal should reach enough housewives and the rest of the throng of absolute amateurs (besides the others) to render a return sufficient to put the real campaign for members over properly.

I have several more ideas along the lines of practical organization, but will refrain until I hear from you just how far the thing has been developed already, if such development has occurred to your knowledge.

The cat is out of the bag RIGHT now, thanks to you and whoever else has taken a similar step, and I've a strong hunch that she's going to claw the gas mask off the face of the truth before she quits. The whole condition described is ETHICALLY WRONG. If DeMille advertised that he would RETURN all submitted ideas and would make public the names of the two readers and guarantee them as persons of character and the only ones, aside from himself, who would examine submitted ideas, he would be safeguarding himself in the best possible way from inclusion with the others mentioned.

Making Fireworks

WITH costume and period productions cluttering up the screen at present, it is little wonder that a number of bewildered free lances are writing in to ask how to meet the situation with manuscripts.

Well, unless you have a copyright on the lives of kings and the fiction relating to past ages, we would not advise you to meet it with aid from the public library.

And it may be depended upon that the studio circles will help themselves to the free stuff without waiting for the aid of the outside writer.

Just how long manufacturers will be able to feed bunches of this ancient lore to an audience of 10,000,000 supposedly modern people, remains to be seen. The public taste switched in favor of costumes and color with dizzy suddenness. Not long ago period stuff was poison to the exhibitor. Now he is fighting for it. It will switch again.

But, if the manufacturer wants merely fireworks the freelance may be able to edge in. The South Sea islands have been run cheaply ragged in the film, but Hawaii, South America and old world nations are picturesque and subject to vivid treatment in a dramatic way.

With, or even without, the yankee-doodle maid and lover, these countries and people may be utilized in colorful way by the original scenarist. Build 'em big and have the situations zip past rapidly. Change the locale for contrast but have a story which is not unreal although fantastic in a way.

Doubtless a number of manufacturers will consider such stories for program features, although several do not seem able to see further than woman and her boudoir in considering manuscripts.

Advice to Directors

Rexy Old Boy: If the censors will not pass your scene of Zuzu at the bath, change the title to "The Debutante" and all will be well again.

D. Work Grippen: Putting the truth upon the screen is quite a gamble but, if you wish to try it in the scene he begs her to "say the words that will make me a happy man," let her retort:

"Stay single."

Tim Ice: If old man Henpeck must marry again in your production, why not have him wed a telephone girl. She would never get his number.

B. Leanyard: We agree that with costume plays crowding the screen, Miss Mae Murine's burden is growing. Why not try a takeoff on some period ingenue?

Dodo Productions: The critic who said that your productions were put on by the arithmetical rule meant two divided by nothing. Pay no attention to these jealous ones.

Big Business!

(Scene: Almost any studio)

"Say, we certainly had a corking story in the studio this week; big, colorful and smashing. Gee! It would have been a knockout, but the Old Man wouldn't play it because it had not been in print."

Cheering Up

ONCE more the independent market is stirring itself anew, and is widening the field for writers.

If anything ever needed to stretch—for the good of promoters—it is the scenario market which has been limited by the intelligence of the swivel chair, and the ignorance of certain powers that be.

The independents have a decided advantage age over the program wielders. The Old Guard is obsessed by its "system." It looks upon story offerings with the same jaundiced eye of the long ago, and the "different" story has little chance.

But the independent is the hope of the screen, for he is progressive. He is making a gamble in a field where failure of the old system is in evidence.

He realizes that no outstanding special has been forthcoming from any studio system, and that the stories which have won have been those which have been departures from program photoplays.

The independent already is looking into the future with much clearer vision than that of the grinding manufacturer, and he is meeting with good success.

There is another reason for his success. It is voiced once more by Frank E. Woods, executive supervisor of Paramount productions, who is leaving soon to join two fellow craftsmen in independent productions.

"It is my opinion," says Mr. Woods, "that closer association of the creative writer with the production is the key to future success."

And Mr. Woods could pause right there, for he has said something worth while in a few words.

No supervisor, no matter how wise in his day and generation can hope to get in constant contact with the production of many working units on his lot. There necessarily are too many supervisors and other detail people between him and the stages. He cannot give the necessary time to his immediate work and find anything like needed hours at the sideline, as it were.

Rollin S. Sturgeon, with years of activity as writer and producer, has added values to the subject. During a talkfest, in a group of fellow craftsmen, Mr. Sturgeon declared that the logical studio manager should first be trained as a writer and producer.

In other words the presiding genius of an institute who expects to make a success of his products, should have intimate knowledge of his entire subject. The imaginative and constructive writer, trained in the studio as director, might well supplant the present swivel-chair occupant, especially when one considers that many managers come from commercial life entirely apart from art and literature.

This fact should seem to carry its own proof even to the layman.

With independent corporations joining in all along the line and many of them handled by persons peculiarly trained for the job of choosing stories as well as supervising the productions thereof, the market is widening for story writers.

There is a second reason. The independents are seeking the best. There are no barriers. They are gambling with a new thing, and neither ancient precedent nor moss-grown systems are going to obscure clear vision.

As it is a fact that, the better the story the better should be production and the greater the sale, the independents would prove much more receptive to "outside" stories than studios where circles are composed of the fellows who are in and are seeing to it that they remain in.

The somewhat different story is going to take a new lease on life.

Letters Home, No. 4

Rejection Jcnctn, Oct. 26, 1922.

Dear Magnesia: I told you I would rite when I got my first check for a skenario, and I probably will do so just as soon as Tommy Harass Woods opens that new independence studilum. I have been studyin the screen as instructed by my ununiversity coarse, takin in "When Nitehood Was a Bloomer," "The Home Bedstead," and "Robin's Good in Hollywood." The lessons wich I have learnd have been very valable because I can see what not to rite because it has been done alreddy. Now if I can find out what to rite, all is goin to be O. K.

CRANKSHAFT JOE.

Unpopular Fiction

"This isn't my regular work. The manicurist is sick and I'm just helping her out. I'm an actress myself."

* * *

"I wouldn't think of trading in my old car. The steel in it is so much better than they are making now, I'd only be worse off."

* * *

"No, boys; I much prefer going out with my wife."

* * *

"The newspapers made a mistake. That was a fellow by the same name."

* * *

"I prefer to rent. Owning property is such a nuisance."

* * *

"I could have had the lead in that picture but I don't like to work for that studio."

What Folks Think

TAKES EXCEPTION TO ARTICLE

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 24.—Editor Camera!—Having read with great interest your article, "Needed: Think-or-Quit Orders," by William Peter Hamilton, editor of the Wall-street Journal, I cannot help to seize the opportunity in replying to his statement, or better said, his remarks.

Mr. Hamilton as an authority ought to know which is which in the picture game and what is needed and wanted. But his words, "Why should so many trashy fiction stories be elaborately picturized and solemnly 'presented'? The old, thumb-marked excuse of giving the public what it wants is no answer to that question, are nothing but a return to my article, 'Knows What the People Want' (of two weeks past)."

Do you think Mr. Hamilton's dictatorial disposition is justified, just because an unknown took the liberty in expressing his opinion? If said gentleman would give me a few minutes of his time and read over my copyrighted synopsis, I am convinced his attitude towards me would be a different one.

My many years of stage experience (German actor) have offered me quite enough opportunity to study all classes, and enriched with material and knowledge gathered this way, one should think that he knows what he is talking about.

If my work is trashy and my stories nothing but trash, then, with exception of our great historical pictures and all adapted stage hits, the rest of the pictures shown so far are also trash.

CARL GERTIG.

(Camera! quoted Mr. Hamilton only as saying "Our people as a whole are suffering from moving pictures and newspapers that save them the trouble of thinking." The passages quoted by Mr. Gertig were Camera!'s words. There was no personal nor specific reference in them.—EDITOR.)

EXPLAINS REID'S ILLNESS

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 20.—Editor Camera!—I wanted you to know the real situation on Wallace Reid. The terribly exaggerated reports that have been circulated in the past day or so, probably have caught your eye and I wanted you to know the real facts.

Wally was to have starred in "Nobody's Money." Some weeks ago he had an unusually bad case of Klieg-eyes. He came back to work before he should, as I understand it, and the case was aggravated. This eye trouble still bothered him when the start of the picture was scheduled, and it was decided to shift Jack Holt into the part. Wally came to Mr. Lasky and explained to him that in addition to the trouble with his eyes, he was worn out from continuous work, and asked for a vacation. This was granted him, and he will not start work on his next picture for about four weeks. Preparations are now being made at the studio for that picture.

I understand that Wally and Mrs.

Reid have gone out to the country somewhere so that Wally can be out in the open and get thoroughly rested. That is all there is to the story.

MANAGEMENT NECESSARY

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 15.—Editor Camera!—Anyone who dares to criticize the motion picture industry is promptly termed a "knocker," and should feel properly squashed. But will you allow one who has stood a good many hard knocks in his life to "ask for it"?

What would a surgeon say if, when he was ready to perform an operation, he was told that he would have to wait as there was no anaesthetic available? Or what would a battery commander say, when he brought his battery into action, if he was informed that a certain gun could not fire, because the fuse-keys had been mislaid? What would any business man say if he found, at an important moment, that everything was upset owing to some oversight which should have been prevented?

But what does a motion picture director say under identical circumstances? Nothing; absolutely nothing. He is so used to this state of affairs, that he takes it as "all in the day's work."

It is not argued that the parallel is an exact one. The making of screen productions is an art, and cannot be reduced to mechanical exactness. But can any one with any experience in the making of pictures argue that a colossal amount of time (or, in other words, money), which is at present wasted, could easily be saved? It is a safe thing to say that if 1 per cent of the money which is spent on picture production was paid to competent business managers, the result would be a saving of at least 10 per cent.

Like any other business man, the director would then give his instructions for the next day, to his manager; and it would be the manager's job to see that his instructions were carried out.

A tremendous apparent waste of time is essential; but, at the same time, a tremendous real waste of time could easily be avoided by proper management. The extravagance which goes hand in hand with miserly cheese-paring in motion picture production, would drive any other industry in the world into bankruptcy in a few weeks.

If only business management could be developed in connection with the making of pictures in Hollywood, there is little doubt but that Hollywood, with its natural advantages, could regard the future with assurance.

But, if such things are neglected, there are many parts of the world where such errors will not be committed, and the future gives food for thought.

Along the Rialto

Buster Keaton, Eddie Kline, Lou Anger and their charming wives, are quartered at the Ambassador. They were here to see the world series, likewise to hatch a new contract.

James Young and Sam Rork, are searching the archives of the various New York libraries for a story equal to "Omar," or the "Masquerader." So far, their search has been in vain.

Ruth Renick is in town. That's all I know.

"Doug and Mary" left for the opening of "Robinhood" in Chicago. This famous couple arrived here amid the Bankers convention, world's series and other affairs, consequently the usual "Doug" publicity was null and void. But "Doug" was not to be overshadowed by a few bankers or baseball players so he conceived a grand idea. He took to the roof at the Ritz and shot his little arrow away into space. This arrow landed (according to Doug) in the waist of a strange gentleman across the avenue. Of course, there was great weeping and gnashing of teeth (according to Doug). So! Doug, just like George Washington, stepped forward exclaiming, "I did it with my little bow and arrow," then a settlement was arranged. (According to Doug): Any way the story got into the dailies, so what matter!

Talmadge Sisters, according to the latest report, are about to beard the Bolsheviks in their dens and to their whiskers. Norma and Conny are now shopping in Paris before meeting a representative of the Soviet government as Joe Schenck plans to make his next productions in Russia.

Conway Tearle will play opposite Pola Negri in her first American picture, "Bella Donna." Mr. Tearle left for Hollywood this week.

"Merton of the Movies," with Glen Hunter, contains thirty-two speaking parts. It opens in Brooklyn this week.

Bebe Daniels has been called to the Long Island Paramount studio where she will make "Glimpses of the Moon," by Edith Wharton, an Allan Dwan production for Paramount Pictures. Bebe will leave for New York immediately upon conclusion of work in "The World's Applause," a William deMille Paramount production featuring Miss Daniels, Lewis Stone, Kathlyn Williams and Harrison Ford. Miss Daniels' mother, Mrs. Phyllis Daniels, will accompany her daughter to New York.

Ernest Torrence left New York after making a great success out of the part of "Luke Hatburn" in "Tol'able David." He has now been sent to Utah with the company making the scenes for "The Covered Wagon." The next move of the company will be to Nevada where they will remain for some time.

Del Henderson and his all-star cast, Marguerite Courtot, Lew Cody, Effie Shannon, Edmund Breese, Barney Shery and Sheldon Lewis, returned to N. Y. yesterday from the Maine woods. Forest fires in that country are raging to such an extent that it was impossible to shoot.

RAYMOND McKEE.

"The Argonaut Mine Disaster" has been completed at the Arcadia studio in San Francisco. It was directed and photographed by S. Millard from a story by R. H. Clark. Golden Rocks Film, Inc., produced it for state's rights release.

North Film News

Bunny Hare, with a company of five people headed by Colin Kinney, sailed from San Francisco on the Steamer Manoa, Wednesday, October 11, for Honolulu, to film some Bunny Hare Antic comedies.

William de Courcy, motion picture director, spent a few days here the first of the week.

Walter Law, well-known to the silver screen, is doing a special two weeks' engagement in vaudeville. He played Fresno last week.

The "All the Brothers Were Valiant" company finished up their work in San Francisco and left for Los Angeles, Thursday night. Two weeks work in the studios, and a week at Catalina, will see the picture finished.

Emmet J. Flynn, director for Lasky, left San Francisco on Friday, after a few days spent at the St. Francis.

Lawson Butt, producer, director and scenario writer, has finished work on the "Flying Dutchman," and left for Los Angeles.

Eugene Palette is in San Francisco for a few days—arrived on Friday.

Robert Thornby, director, with a company of ten people with Wally Van as the lead, is here doing some exteriors.

Irene Rich arrived on Saturday, and spoke at the Industrial Exposition at the Civic auditorium as the official representative of the Moving Picture Actors of Southern California. She thanked San Francisco for its never failing kindness and hospitality to the people of the screen.

Alec Francis, well known to the picture world, is in town.

Hobart Bosworth arrived on Sunday to have a personal look at the pictures being filmed by the Utility Film corporation, of which he is the head.

Wayne Mack, director, is finishing up the continuity of another two-reel comedy, its name still a secret, to be done at the Auditorium as soon as the two present pictures are finished.

Walter Morosco spent part of last week in San Francisco.

Richard Dix was among those present in San Francisco last week.

Max Graf returned from New York after closing the deal by which the Graf productions, Inc., will release through Metro. Graf visited several exchanges on business concerning the release of "The Forgotten Law," early in November.

The photo-play rights to William Dudley Pelley's latest novel "The Fog," have been purchased by the Graf productions. The continuity is now being written and work will be started on the production within the next few weeks.

Lieut. Burt Hall, American ace and well known to the cinema world as having done the official Boy Scout pictures, and others, is in San Francisco on his way to Japan to film a picture.

Allen Holubar and his wife, Dorothy Phillips, spent a few days in San Francisco looking up locations for the next First National production. They had just finished shooting some scenes up at Truckee.

"Her Price," with an all-star cast of players, including Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley, Mitchel Lewis, Richard Tucker and Kate Lester. Belasco productions corporation. Dallas Fitzgerald is directing. Part of the picture was shot in a southern studio, but the company is now at work in San Francisco. "Her Price" is an original story by Lois Zellner, who also wrote the continuity.

Robert Thornby, Wally Van, John Lamson, Ramsey Wallace, Frank Harlan, E. De Revelle, Stephen Round, and H. Cannouche, have returned from San Francisco, where they were working on "The Drivin' Fool," for The Regent Film company.

Two members of the great Chinese Dramatic company recently arrived in San Francisco to play at the Chinese theatre. They had their first try-out before the camera, at the Exposition on Sunday afternoon. They were real Chinese flappers with gay embroidered coats and trousers, bobbed heads and pearl earrings.

The Port of San Francisco pictures, taken and shown at the Exposition by the Blanche film laboratories, are scenic, industrial, and educational pictures, of not only San Francisco harbor and shipping, but its factories, and the production of many articles shipped through its port.

A Perfectly Proper Drama

By W. E. W.

SCENE 1.

Interior parlor. Lillian St. Claire, beautiful belle, is holding out her hands pleadingly to her father, Edmund St. Claire, begging him to take her to Hollywood.

SCENE 2.

(Scene censored because thug used hairpin instead of dynamite to break through door.) (Sub-title.)

BLACK DUGAN ABDUCTS LILLIAN ST. CLAIRE, DRAGS HER TO HIS LAIR AND INFORMS HER HE WILL NOT MARRY HER UNLESS SHE RETURNS TO HER FATHER AND OBTAINS $10,000,000 AND A COLD LUNCH. LILLIAN SADLY DEPARTS ON THE MISSION, AND PLEADS WITH HER FATHER.

SCENE 3.

Same as Scene 1.—Lillian holding out hands pleadingly to father.

SCENE 4.

(Scene censored because theft is shown when Lillian steals ham sandwich from millionaire.) (Sub-title.)

LILLIAN FAILS IN HER MISSION AND DUGAN FORCES HER TO AID HIM IN A ROBBERY WHICH IS DISCOVERED BY THE POLICE, WHO SEND DUGAN TO PRISON, LILLIAN ESCAPING TO HER HOME, WHERE SHE PLEADS FOR FORGIVENESS.

SCENE 5.

Same as Scene 1.—Lillian holding out hands pleadingly to father.

SCENE 6.

(Scene censored on ground of reflection upon the police, members of the force employed in picture unfortunately being homely specimens.) (Sub-title.)

THE POLICE TRAIL LILLIAN TO HER HOME, BUT CANNOT BELIEVE THAT ONE SO YOUNG AND FAIR CAN BE GUILTY. THEY LEAVE HER STILL PLEADING WITH HER FATHER.

SCENE 7.

Same as Scene 1.—Lillian holding out hands pleadingly to father.

SCENE 8.

(Censored because of cruelty toward a blonde.) (Sub-title.)

THE STERN FATHER DRIVES LILLIAN AWAY. SHE WANDERS FOR DAYS, FRIENDLESS AND THIRSTY. HEARING THAT HER FATHER IS A DECEDENT SHE TAXIS HOME TO FIND IT A FALSE REPORT. SHE PLEADS FOR A LITTLE SMILE.

SCENE 9.

Same as Scene 1.—Lillian holding out hands pleadingly to father.

Cinema Psychology

LESSON I. Exponents of Sex

In 1919 it was Theda Bara, the chaise-lounger, in "A Woman There Was."

In 1920 it was Lew Cody, the lounge lizard, in "The Butterfly Man."

In 1921 it was Cecil DeMille, boudoir maestro of "The Affairs of Anatol."

In 1922 who will it be?

* * *

With Elinor Glyn writing right along for motion pictures, we suppose the bookcase makers will put out sex-tional cases for films.

* * *

We are deeply disappointed. Up to going to press no comedy company had announced a picture production of "When Knighthood was in Flour."

* * *

We also anticipate a "Robbin' Good in Hollywood."

CONNIE SEEKS THE EQUATOR

Constance Talmadge, who is touring in Europe, has written Nellie Revell, who edits a column from her bed in a New York hospital, that she is freezing and would like to locate the equator. Says Miss Revell:

Connie sailed with a Greek passport, as the final papers in her divorce had not been signed. If the Greek quota is filled when she returns to this country, and Connie is detained at Ellis Island, she probably will think she has found the equator or some warmer climate. I hope it doesn't happen to Connie, but it would make a great press story.

used might frighten children and the bass drummer.) (Sub-title.)

BLACK DUGAN ESCAPES FROM PRISON AND HASTENS TO SHOOT UP AND OTHERWISE ANNOY LILLIAN AND HER FATHER, BUT, AS HE IS ABOUT TO FIRE, HE SLIPS ON A BANANA PEELING, AND DIES, WHILE LILLIAN PLEADS WITH HER FATHER FOR JUST ONE KIND WORD.

SCENE 11.

*Same as Scene 1.—Lillian holding out hands pleadingly to father.**

(THE END.)

**Close of picture censored for fear that forgiveness might lead some angel child to follow Lillian's example.*

The P. A.'s Friends

The Arkadelphia (Ark.) News has suspended as a daily, and will be published once a week.

The Baltimore Post will soon start as a Scripps-McRae tabloid evening daily.

In a few weeks the Baltimore Times will be launched in the afternoon field, making four afternoon papers there. The News and the Evening Sun are the others. Morning papers are the Sun and the American.

The Bronx (N. Y.) Home News becomes a daily paper week after next.

Six new beach city papers will start about November 1, but copy for them need be sent only to one office, the Santa Monica Morning Progress, 1316 Fifth street, Santa Monica, Cal. The papers will be the Culver City Morning Call, the Ocean Park Morning Chronicle, the Sawtelle Morning Sentinel, the Venice Morning Journal and the Beverly Hills Gazette.

The Clarksburg (W. Va.) Telegram adds a Sunday roto section next week.

The City of Boston has in operation a publicity bureau, with two "secretaries" at $5,000 a year, working under the mayor. The bureau is officially known as the "commercial, industrial and publicity bureau." Its purpose is to awaken public sentiment in favor of abolishing the freight differential in New England.

Carl Sandburg, movie editor of the Chicago News, read some of his poems and played the guitar for the journalism class at Northwestern University, in a talk on "Poetry and the Newspaper."

Donald Carr, son of Harry Carr of the Los Angeles Times, is on the news staff of the Portland Oregonian.

WONDER WHO SPENT IT ALL?

A tabulation of advertising in 72 national magazines in 1921 made by Curtis Publishing company, shows the Saturday Evening Post leading with $25,404,697 worth. Photoplay is on the list with $555,528; Motion Picture with $387,767, and Theater with $174,011.

It's Not Our Sins; It's Our Stupidities!

A FEW months ago there was much excited whispering over a paper-covered book called "The Sins of Hollywood."

The publisher of the book, a man well known to many motion picture people although he was probably not suspected of this particular piece of sensationalism, was practically penniless. He was not prosecuted by federal authorities. They did seize all copies of the book and the plates from which it was printed.

The point is, there was hardly a line in "The Sins of Hollywood" that had not already been printed, had not already been read by the public.

* * *

If "The Sins of Hollywood" was unfit to go through the mails, so were the Los Angeles newspapers that originally printed the stories. So were the magazines of more or less general circulation that repeated them, more or less accurately.

However, it would not appear that the book's suppression was so much because of its contents as because of its references to certain celebrities. These objected—and understandingly,—to the revival of forgotten incidents. At the demand of these persons, undoubtedly the book was suppressed.

* * *

All this is not in apology for a book that had no excuse for being.

It is written to point out that some persons in motion pictures can secure suppression of publications containing matter detrimental to themselves personally.

A similar case is the sudden retirement from the newstands of a little vermilion-covered monthly, Film Truth, a year or so ago. It was about to print a certain story. Persons mentioned in the story purchased the magazine.

When selfish individual prestige is threatened, we act.

Now why not take action when the prestige of the entire industry is similarly threatened?

* * *

Collier's has been printing a series of articles that probably contain considerable truth. The series began with an article entitled, "Why I Am Ashamed of the Movies."

The apparent idea behind the articles is that it's not the sin, it's the stupidity that's the matter with motion pictures.

Camera's objection to the articles is that the matters treated of are internal problems of no possible concern of the public. Their writer, if genuinely anxious to benefit motion pictures, could have submitted his statements through one of the publications reaching motion picture people only—or could have printed them privately for circulation among the persons concerned.

The public, skimming over the titles of the articles, their introductory sentences, and the exceedingly silly captions under the illustrations, forms an erroneous idea of what it's all about. They may become prejudiced against all motion pictures because of them.

The points made in these articles are probably no more true, no more false than statements printed in the suppressed publications referred to.

Why did not some of the persons, so zealous in suppression when their personalities were involved, take some steps to put these Collier's articles before the industry, not before the public?

If anyone has a suitable answer, he is welcome to present it. One is hoped for, but not anticipated.

TED TAYLOR.

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

Production will soon commence on the third of a series of Clara Kimball Young feature productions to be released through Metro exchanges. This next film has been adapted from "The Woman of Bronze," a French novel by Henry Kistemaeker, translated into English by Paul Kester and will bear the same title.

Hugo and Mabel Ballin started work on their screen version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," act 24. Mr. Ballin has written the continuity, and is personally directing it at the Goldwyn studio for release by that company. Mrs. Ballin will be starred in the role of Becky Sharp.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," by John Fox, Jr., a romance of the Cumberlands, is to be made by Paramount. Mary Miles Minter is to be the star.

"Lucky Dog," the two-reel comedy written for Carter DeHaven by William Rice, New York City scenarist, will be put into production about November 1. Mr. DeHaven is just completing his seventh subject of a series of twelve two-reel comedies.

"News," drama of American life, will be the next feature of Thomas H. Ince. Production started last week at the Ince studios.

John Griffith Wray is megaphoning the picture. May McAvoy heads an all-star cast.

The story is by Bradley King, scenario writer for the Ince studios.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS STARTS

Dorothy Phillips' next starring vehicle will be produced by Allen Holubar and distributed through First National. Production of "The White Frontier" started October 30. The story was written by Jeffrey Deprend and adapted by Allen Holubar with the assistance of Tay Garnett. Harold Bucquet is assistant director, Byron Haskins cinematographer, Frank Lawrence editor, James F. O'Shea business manager and Mrs. Agnes Hicks auditor.

The publication of the novel will be held up until the date of the first release of the photodramatic version.

The Baby Peggy company has been locationing at the San Fernando Mission filming scenes for Peggy's present special Century production, "The Senorita." Alf Goulding is wielding the megaphone.

NEXT BOUT WITH SHAKESPEARE

(Exclusive to Camera!)

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Jack Johnson, ex-heavyweight champion of the world, is going in for Shakespeare with both fists. Moses A. Sachs, attorney, announces he is acting on behalf of Bert Jonas, theatrical producer, in drawing up papers for incorporation of Jack Johnson Play Producing company. Its object is to produce "Othello" without a makeup.

RAYMOND McKEE.

RAY TO MAKE "MILES STANDISH"

"The Courtship of Miles Standish" is now being prepared at the Ray studios. This is the biggest production that Charles Ray has ever attempted, and requires considerable preparation. Ray will portray John Alden, and Frederick Sullivan will direct. The entire cast has not yet been decided upon.

"Bud" Geary is not a matinee screen idol yet. But we predict his early success.

BLACHE JOINS UNIVERSAL

Herbert Blache, long Nazimova's director, has signed a contract with Universal to produce a special, title and theme of which are not yet announced.

Blache arrived in Hollywood from New York a week ago. He directed three pictures in the east for Tri-Art: "The Beggar Maid" and "The Young Painter," starring Mary Astor, and "The Bashful Suitor." Part of the work was done at Blache's studio, the Solax, at Fort Lee.

"I wouldn't attempt to produce in the east in the winter time," declared Blache.

H. J. Reynolds, president of Renco Film company, is arranging for studio space. He is planning to start production within three weeks of "After the Ball," from Charles Harris' song and story. The company's office is at 724 South Spring street.

"The Last Days of Pompeii," will be Irving Cumming's second big production for the Principal Pictures Corporation. The major portion will be passed in Italy, where the scenes will be filmed in the exact locale of the story.

Rumors that "Ben-Hur" would be made by another company were emphatically denied in a statement given out at the Goldwyn studio. June Mathis is now engaged on the continuity and will return to the coast shortly from New York to continue her work in close association with the studio executives.

Complete

"The Scarlet Lily," a B. P. Shulberg production starring Katherine McDonald, directed by Victor Shertzinger, First National.

"The Shylock of Wall Street," co-starring Zeena Keefe and Dore Davidson, directed and scenarized by Burton King for State Pictures corporation at Ideal studio, West New York.

"The Scoop," a J. K. McDonald production directed by J. K. McDonald and starring Johnnie Jones at the Hollywood studios.

"Her Price," all-star production directed by Dallas FitzGerald for Belasco, San Francisco, story by Lois Zellnar.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," Elmer Clifton's whaling drama, featuring Marguerite Courtot and Raymond McKee.

Kitty Gordon has finished "Adele" and will begin another picture under direction of Wallace Worsley.

Truman Van Dyke is finishing in a six-reeler at Universal city and will follow this with a feature role at the Robertson-Cole studios.

WILL PRODUCE INDEPENDENTLY

Rollin Sturgeon and Lucien Hubbard, under the name of Sturgeon-Hubbard productions, have leased space at Universal City and started making an original story of Hubbard's. Hubbard is now a member of the writing staff at the Famous Players-Lasky studios.

GERSON PLANS GREATER ACTIVITY

The Paul Gerson pictures corporation of San Francisco, engaged in turning out the Plum Center comedies for the Film Booking Offices of America, will, on the completion of these comedies, enlarge its producing activities. They will produce a series of feature pictures. Details of the contemplated plans will be announced shortly.

"The snow and slush make film work impossible—unless you are making a snow picture."

Mme. Blache is in France, writing and directing a picture at a new studio at Nice.

Jack White is working on the third of his new series of Educational-Mermaid comedies, "High Power." It will follow "The Steeplechaser."

The second of the Earl Hurd comedies presented through Educational by C. C. Burr is "Fresh Fish." Bobby Bumps and his dog Fido perform stunts on make-believe scenery water and in real water.

PYRAMID COMING TO HOLLYWOOD

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., will extend its production activities to Hollywood, where two feature photo-plays will be made with Ray C. Smallwood in charge of production. "The Deerslayer," James Fenimore Cooper's novel, and "What Fools Men Are," will be made on the coast. In Pyramid's Astoria (L. I.) studios, George Terwilliger will make "Wife in Name 'Only,'" by Bertha M. Clay, and a second director will make Joseph C. Lincoln's "Captain Eri."

Truth About the Schools

Camera! is receiving dozens of unsigned letters about the movie schools. These are of no value. Letters must have the name and address of the writer to be of service in Camera!'s campaign against fakers. Names will be held in confidence if requested. Write your experience—and sign your name.

PERSONS who have paid money for "preferred registration," memberships in "casting clubs," fees for jobs that did not exist, have been reporting the matter to Camera!

It would be well for any person seeking work in motion pictures through any form of agency to read the state act regulating private employment agencies. This in effect provides that——private employment agencies must be licensed;

—classes of instruction that undertake to furnish information to pupils and employees and labor whereby pupils are placed for employment in the occupation taught, are private employment agencies;

—fees may not be accepted for registration;

—fee may not be accepted unless an order for help has been obtained from the prospective employer;

—fee must be repaid if applicant fails to obtain employment;

—if the place to which applicant is sent is outside city limits, expenses incurred in going and returning must also be paid by the agency;

—fee must be repaid if applicant is discharged within seven days;

—misleading information must not be printed in advertisements or stationery;

—false promises of employment must not be made to any applicant for work or registration.

Violations of any portion of the labor laws should be reported by telephone to the State Labor Bureau, Pico 3621, or in person at the Bureau's offices in the Pacific Finance Bldg., Los Angeles. W. E. Steineck is State Labor Commissioner.

Select Film Company

THIS name is lettered on the door of room 330 at 315 South Broadway. There is also a notice on the door: "Enter room 332." On the door of 332 is the name of an Attorney Service company, but it is also the Select Film company's reception room.

Mr. Woods, a young man with sideburns, meets applicants who answer ads telling of "a forthcoming picture," or of "a picture now casting." He makes certain that they are not experienced in pictures. Then he tells of the instruction in make-up. Classes are held evenings, the course of ten lessons lasts two weeks, and the price is $15.

A mother who answered the ad was told that her little daughter could be taught acting for $50, and that the wages for the mother and child would never be less than $7.50 a day.

Mr. Woods exhibits still photographs to applicants. These show adults in various poses, as though participating in a picture, for all the studios, and mentions among others Realart, First National and United.

Associated Artists

THIS company has its office in the old few weeks ago Lewis Harper, 61, of Balshofer studio. At this address a 4615 Finley avenue, was arrested by the police. He was found guilty of making improper advances to a young woman who called at his office, and is now serving 180 days in the city jail.

Apparently there was no activity at the Balshofer studio for several weeks. Then ads similar to the following began to appear in the papers:

WANTED—Women for motion pictures.

Experience unnecessary. Apply 9 to 9, 1329 Gordon ave., Hollywood.

When an applicant arrives the young woman in charge makes sure she is inexperienced. Then she takes the applicant in the back room and tells her about the make-up class. The class is held in the evening at the studio and is somewhat cheaper than most of the schools. The price is only $10 for the necessary lessons.

"But more than one lesson may be given in one day."

FOR the information of readers, Camera! herewith lists schools of motion picture acting and make-up and other film activities advertising in the classified sections of Los Angeles papers. Letters are invited from any readers who have had experience with these enterprises.

JACK POLO, 308 Mason Opera house building. Wants refined men and women for steady work if right type. Exchanges prospects with Goldstein, Chamber of Commerce.

BENNY GOLDSTEIN, 418 Chamber of Commerce building. Last call was for 40 persons with good wardrobe to make $7.50 to $15 a day. Exchanges prospects with Polo, Mason Opera house.

SELECT FILM COMPANY, 315 Laughlin building. Wants cultured people for pictures now casting.

BALSHOFER STUDIO, 1329 Gordon street. Receiving applications for picture now casting.

5107 HOLLYWOOD BOULEVARD. New proposition for inexperienced women who want to get in movies.

FILM EXCHANGE, 643 South Olive street. R. B. Wilcox wants types, experience unnecessary; sends them to Scripture Films, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD FILM COMPANY, 311 Grosse building. M. J. Lynch offers contract to persons qualifying.

APOLLO FILM COMPANY, 319 Grosse building. M. J. Lynch conducts classes in make-up and acting; $15 for 6 lessons.

BUD HARRIS, 734 Olive street. Sends pupils to Apollo Film Company.

JACK C. O'BRIEN PRODUCTIONS, 410 Court street, wants new types, experience unnecessary, gives lessons. Has agents at room 1004, 405 South Hill street, and room 215, 321 Third street.

FASHION INDUSTRIAL FILM COMPANY, 5444 Hollywood boulevard (Assistant Directors' association rooms); Max Asher offers tuition in acting and make-up, work at studios without pay required in training.

HARRY GAYLORD PRODUCTIONS, Santa Monica and Bronson avenues (Caswell studio); want persons to invest, take instruction, and act. Works with "agency" at 646 San Fernando building.

CRAWFORD, Caswell studio, Santa Monica and Bronson. Wants 2 blondes, 4 brunettes, 4 character women, 7 young men, 3 character men for pictures.

The young woman who represents the Associated Artists states that the company is about to produce four pictures, the first being a French-Canadian story the scene of which is laid in Quebec. This will be produced in Hollywood, she said, and the students of make-up and acting will be given an opportunity to try out for parts.

Caswell Studio

THIS studio is a favorite headquarters for promoters of schools and various other young and struggling film activities that aim to make money as they go.

It is on Santa Monica boulevard, and is bounded by Bronson and Tamarind avenues. This offers a variety of addresses for the use of lessees. One may simply give his address, Caswell studio. Another may give 1110 Tamarind avenue. Another may give corner of Bronson and Santa Monica boulevards. Another may give 1107 Bronson avenue.

To Caswell studio M. J. Lynch and his henchmen take their pupils of a Sunday. While an assistant grinds an imaginary camera, Lynch selects the more promising girls and men to pose for "stills," as though they had been acting in a regular picture. These stills are convenient articles to have in the office when applicants hesitate over the $15 charge for a course.

Brought forth at the psychological moment with the comment, "Here are some stills from the studio showing our students acting in a picture," these photographs often close the "sale."

King, manager of the studio, formerly ran ads of his own in the papers. He offered make-up courses for $15.

Harper, now in jail, is supposed to have recruited pupils for King from his office at Balshofer studio. When Harper was arrested King attempted to get someone to take his place. All his partner had to do was pay the $40 a month rent for the Balshofer office, pay for the ads in the classified sections, and send the pupils to King. In return the partner would get $7.50 out of every $15 received from pupils for the course. There would also be a split on photographs, for which pupils would be charged exorbitant rates.

Since Camera!'s articles about the schools started, King is said to have left the studio business and is selling monuments.

At the Caswell studio is also W. H. Crawford, who advertises in the help wanted columns of the daily papers for blondes, brunettes, young men, character men and women for a picture. He tells applicants that he is forming a private company and would let in ten selected people with $250 apiece. He does not promise work, but one can obtain film tests from him by paying $7.50 to cover the cost of the film.

Gaylord Productions also have headquarters at Caswell studio, and offices in the San Fernando building downtown. More will be told of these enterprises in succeeding articles.

He informs inquirers that he does casting

This is the sixth in Camera!'s series of articles exposing the methods of the schools of movie acting and make-up. Camera!'s declaration of war on fake schools was made September 30. The October 7 article dealt with Scripture Films, Inc., and the "film exchange" at 643 South Olive street; October 14, with the Hollywood Film company, and the Apollo Film company; October 21, with the Fashion-Industrial Film company; October 28, with the Picture Players' exchange and Screen Land.

Back numbers can be obtained for 10 cents each at Camera! office.

Where to Find People You Know

Gilbert Pratt, director for Fox, is directing a picture for the Motion Picture Utility corporation, with Creighton Hale, Kathryn Lewis, Aileen Lopaz and Jack Pierce. Ross Ledermann is assistant director.

Dorothy Manners has been cast in "Pawn Ticket 210," William Fox production for Shirley Mason.

When Monty Banks resumes his work at the Ben Wilson studios, he will write his own stories, do his own starring, casting and directing.

After completing his contracts in "The Rip-Tide" and another Paramount picture, George Rigas will start his own producing unit.

Alma Bennett, a new ingenue, has been loaned by Goldwyn to play opposite Tom Mix in his next picture.

Monte Blue has been signed to play the leading male role in "Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel, which is being produced by Harry Rapf for Warner Brothers at their Hollywood studio. Camera work started Monday under the direction of Sidney Franklin with Lucien Andriot at the camera.

Claire Simpson has been engaged for an important part in Fatty Karr's latest funfest, "Weight for Me," at Federal studios.

Ross Fisher has been engaged as chief cinematographer for "The Greatest Menace," which is being made at the Fine Arts studios.

Current Reviews

"Lorna Doone"

MAURICE Tourneur has made a production featuring beauty in the Thos. Ince production, "Lorna Doone." It is the sort of production that will associate the word "art" with motion pictures. The names of his well known players are forgotten and they are looked upon only as characters of the book. It is not the development of the story, though that is well carried out, nor is it the thrill of the action that is most remembered of "Lorna Doone." It is the beauty of his scenes first, then the action comes later. His picturization is poetry and his motivation is lurid melodrama. Never is there an interruption in the action of his picture for the sake of a closeup. Tourneur uses close shots continuing the action of the long shot, but never the posed closeup that impedes the progress of his story.

Harry Sharp, cameraman for Tourneur, was to "Lorna Doone" what the co-director is to other productions. His knowledge of art and proper use of light show their results upon the screen. Painsstaking care to the finest detail is also shown in his work.

Wyndam Gittens and Maurice Tourneur are responsible for the continuity. Scene sequence is smooth enough but the melodrama is a bit overdeveloped.

Lorna Doone is played by Madge Bellamy. In looking back we remember Lorna rather than Miss Bellamy because she impressed a true representation of the fiction character upon our minds.

May Giraci plays Lorna as a child. She makes a very good start in the part for Miss Bellamy to pick up.

Charles Hatton is John Ridd as a boy. His performance is sincere though a little selfconscious.

Then John Bowers steps into the role and is the John Ridd of William Blackmore's novel, bursting through the book covers and on to the screen in an everlasting celluloid record.

Then Frank Keenan in all his grandeur takes possession of the scenes in which he appears. We find our emotions swayed to his liking.

Joan Standing in a young character role gives a splendid performance.

"Divorce Coupons"

SANDWICHED into one of the best vaudeville bills we have witnessed at the Hillstreet for many a day, is the Vitagraph picture featuring the extremely likeable Corrine Griffith.

While the audience is inclined to wonder why any producer should remain married so long to the plot of "Divorce Coupons," still this is one of the best produced productions from the Vitagraph establishment for quite some time. It is well cast and very well directed. The characters are human and the story interests, despite its thread-bare theme.

However, in cutting the picture, so much has been eliminated without the substitution of explanatory subtitle, that the reason for several important things is entirely missing. That it does not kill the genuine interest of the audience in the smooth production is fortunate indeed.

No program with cast being published, we cannot do individual justice to several highly deserving persons connected with this production.

"Golf"

IF You expect to fall off your chair with laughter when you see "Golf" you will be sadly disappointed. Larry Semon still has the idea that one person can write, direct and act in a successful picture. When he hits upon a funny gag he plays it to death. The episode of the squirrel and the golf ball is so long it drags, and the comedy element grows cold with excess footage.

Lucille Carlisle, for some reason or other, plays two roles. One is entirely unnecessary, or could be merged easily with the other. Her work is slapstick, and many laughs are added to her credit by falls and bumps.

Larry Semon depends upon his trick props for laughs. Smashing vases and substituting goose eggs for golf balls, all old stuff, are the funny touches to "Golf." He overlooked possibilities in teeing off the grand piano and gave that footage to splashing soup in the villain's face. This two-reeler is a good filler on a program, but not a feature.

"The Sin Flood"

IF you are but mildly interested in any class of pictures, see "The Sin Flood."

It has one situation in it so fraught with possibilities that this alone will repay you. You may feel that adaptor or director—one or the other—has not reached the depth of the Berger novel, but you will be repaid for your time and attention.

The film production is built almost entirely around the unusual situation, and the rest of the fiction tale has been neglected, but there is enough extraordinary revelation by a splendid cast to make "The Sin Flood" a popular production and attraction.

Imagine, if you can, a group of people ranging from the drunken bum to the millionaire, inmates of a cellar saloon, trapped by a flood which covers the city outside. With the end slowly approaching as the oxygen of the air is exhausted, how do these various mortals face death? See it for yourself.

Richard Dix, as the young broker, who has the affair with Helene Chadwick, is pleasing, while the latter is our idea of what a "leading woman" should be in this production. She fairly drags upon your sympathies and is decidedly charming in her lighter moments.

A very telling impersonation is given by James Kirkwood as the derelict preacher. The peculiar, almost symbolic role, is played with such sincerity that Mr. Kirkwood, for a time, is the lead.

The other roles are glove-fitting. Great wisdom was exhibited in casting such people as John Stepling, Ralph Lewis, William Orlamond, L. H. King, Gertrude Astor, Darwin Karr and Howard Davies in the roles of such contrasty characters.

The clever work of the team, Walling and Orlamond, was very clever. Mr. King did nothing so well as to keep constantly in the limelight.

Frank Lloyd directed this sure-fire box office success and put plenty of Lloyd values in it.

"Rags to Riches"

ONCE again we see the old familiar melodramatic hokum on the screen under the title of "Rags to Riches." It is recognized hokum and yet it is entertaining and will probably have a big run.

William Nigh and Walter de Leon wrote the story and continuity with events following each other in expected and usual order. And spectators follow the action with the anticipated breathlessness expected of them.

Here Wesley Barry is seen for the first time without his freckles to depend upon. He doesn't need them. He carries the picture with his personality and, we judge, he was allowed to act in his own way rather than be forced into situations and actions unfitted to him. This free reign was allowed by Wallace Worsley who directed the Warner brothers production. Worsley put the story to action in a conventional way. Even the thrills bear the mimeographed earmarks.

There is a romantic trend in the last three reels that lends a little heart interest. These scenes, however, are very much apart from the mainspring of the plot and bring back memories of the days when films carried a plot and counterplot. However, the players, Niles Welsh and Ruth Renick, are a popular pair, and though they are both placed in ridiculous situations we somehow forget it watching their work.

Dick Sutherland, the recognized screen bully, creates terror in the hearts of the young observers and scores another successful performance.

Harlan Tucker plays an ordinary business man role and the most one can say is, that he is well cast.

Russell Simpson steals the sympathy of the picture with his interpretation of a kind hearted sheriff.

The photography is good straight work.

"The Cowboy and the Lady"

SOMEONE closed their eyes and reached way back on the bookshelf and, brushing aside the cobwebs, found "The Cowboy and the Lady." Then they handed it to Julien Josephson, who scenarized Clyde Fitch's play. Charles Maigne then directed the continuity. As a result we see a well arranged sequence of scenes, well directed, and with a well-known cast, but—there is a great something missing. Perhaps there is a lack of story in the original, or a total absence of human touches. At any rate, there is no spirit to the production. It is flat.

Mary Miles Minter, the lady, really troops in this picture, and her slightly emotional role is handled better than usual.

Tom Moore is the dude cowboy. His smile is the most noticeable part of his acting.

Viora Daniel does very well in her first drama picture. Her beauty carries when the situation cannot quite be met by acting.

Robert Schable and Guy Oliver have the heavy roles. Oliver's work is of that old reliable type that makes one think he would be good in anything.

The photography is very good, but it, too, seems flat.

ROBERTSON SIGNS

John S. Robertson has signed a long-term contract with Inspiration Pictures to direct the Gishes and Richard Barthelmess. Henry King is already with the organization as director.

Henry King will direct Lillian Gish in "Old Husbands and Young Wives," from Ralph Proctor's story, and will also stage it next year, he announces. It will follow the production of "The White Sister," in which he is directing Lillian Gish in Rome.

Harry Durant, Lasky scenarist, has a binding indenture over Mary Astor, 17, screen actress. Supreme Court Justice McCook refused to restrain him from interfering between her and Distinctive Productions, Inc. Durant may control her screen career and collect 25 percent of salary exceeding $100 a week for three years yet.

Will Rogers, now appearing in the Ziegfeld Follies at the New Amsterdam theatre, New York city, has become a regular contributor to the Selznick News and his pointed comments on current events will be a feature of the reel.

Charles H. Duell, Boyce Smith, Fred Neuman and George Newgrass, the latter two constituting the law firm of Neuman & Newgrass, have brought suit in the Supreme Court asking $55,000 from Thos. H. Ince for services rendered in connection with the Ince-First National contract.

Carol Dempster, a Griffith player, will visit her sister in Los Angeles shortly. Miss Dempster's home was formerly in Los Angeles.

Mack Sennett has announced that Mabel Normand's next production will be "Mary Ann."

Ferdinand Earle, well known artist and producer of "Omar Khayyam," made the art titles for the Selznick special production, "One Week of Love," in which Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle are the featured players.

James Young is delivering a series of lectures on films at Columbia University. An announcement that Mary Pickford and Nita Naldi are to appear before the students will doubtless materially increase enrollment.

William A. Haas, for the past eight years assistant manager and publicity director of the Strand theatre of Pasadena, has taken over the management of the Ambassador Theatre.

More than sixty students from the University of Southern California have been working in Fatty Karr's newest comedy for Popular Pictures, Inc., at Federal studio.

Mrs. Irving Cummings is doing the research for "The Last Days of Pompeii," Bulwar Lytton's romance, which Irving Cummings is preparing to film.

Rollin Sturgeon had to use a hook to get an untutored actor on and off a scene in a Dorothy Phillips picture at Universal.

COMPLETES DISTRIBUTION PLANS

Mrs. Angela C. Kaufman, author of "The Greatest Menace," a story based on life as she found it among narcotic addicts in the Los Angeles county jail, has announced that the picture will be shown in the leading theaters of every large city in the country. She completed plans for such distribution this week.

New York Stage Children will have a summer home in Navesink, N. J. An old home is being entirely renovated and will be ready to open next spring.

Monte Katterjohn announces that particular attention is to be paid to casting Katterjohn films.

Edna Geister, of the Studio club staff, will appear on the program of the Southern California teacher's convention to be held in November. Miss Geister is the author of several books on the subject of recreation.

A fully-equipped gymnasium has been rigged up on the Century lot, and, headed by directors Alf Goulding and Al Herman, Century employees are learning to spend part of their after-work hours in brisk work-outs.

Madge Bellamy, Thomas H. Ince star, who was loaned to play with Lloyd Hughes under direction of Tom Forman in a new Schulberg picture, "Are You a Failure," has returned to the Ince studios.

Along the Rialto

Marguerite Courtot, the sweet Quaker star in Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships," has gone to Portland, Maine, to make another picture.

Louis Calhern is back in the legit. He is playing the lead opposite Doris Keane in "The Czarina" and as there are about a hundred big towns who will not be happy until they have seen this great play, Lou seems to be in for a long term.

The Green Room Club will hold its first "Revel" of the season in the clubhouse November 12.

Wm. Fox has taken over the Astor theatre for an indefinite period to present six pictures. The first will have its premiere on Monday night, October 30, this being "The Town That Forgot God."

E. H. Griffith will direct T. Roy Barnes in a special for International. Production will start on the first of November.

Edwin Carewe, directing "The Symphony of Life," says the only time New York crowds don't gape is when they are asleep. He is filming a section of Cherry Hill, made famous in the crime history of the city, in the new production.

Ellis Parker Butler, who made a fortune out of "Pigs Is Pigs," is now engaged in turning out advertising copy on "Pictures Is Pictures." "East Is West," the new Constance Talmadge vehicle, is the first he will exploit.

Nazimova will return to the legitimate stage under the direction of Earl Carroll.

Will H. Hays is going to reform the fresh office boy who is more supercilious in his mood than the Czar of all Russia ever dared be. A man's job, all right.

Chas. Giblyn, director, left Saturday on the S. S. Ryndam, for Holland, where he will start production on a feature entitled "Hypocrites."

Johnny Hine's third five-reel feature is now under way at the Glendale studios, the working title is "Luck." The cast includes Charles Murray, J. Barney Sherry and Edmund Breeze.

Eddie Kline, Buster Keaton's director, is loaned to C. C. Burr for one picture, to direct Raymond McKee's next.

Raymond McKee's new picture is called "The Four Orphans." It will be previewed at the "Gotham" this week. (New York).

INGRAM BOOSTS FLORIDA

MIAMI, Fla.—"I see no reason why Miami should not in time become a producing center for motion pictures that will rival Los Angeles," Rex Ingram is quoted at a luncheon here. Florida abounds in color, beauty and exotic vegetation and offers large facilities for sea pictures, Ingram said.

The Narrow Path

WRITERS who absorb their breakfast food and loll in their Rolls Royces far from Hollywood-on-the-Boulevard, doubtless are enjoying a dizzy sensation at present as they read the many published treatises regarding picture productions and photoplays upon which they are based.

One correspondent reveals a very uncertain state of mind by declaring, as far as he can figure, the successful production is bound to prove unsuccessful because it is a success.

He was still hanging onto something for support when he wrote the letter. He continues, that according to these masterly writers, the conclusion seems to be that art is really the ailment of pictures, and that someone should be appointed as deflector in every studio.

On the other hand, hokum also is being stabbed in several vital places by some of this group, leaving the correspondent so balmy that he is thinking of calling in an alienist before the wagon backs up for him.

As a matter of fact picture production recently reached such an "advanced" stage that someone who seemed to mean it, did advise putting a little art in photoplays, but a manufacturer, accompanied by his box-office man, black-jacked the forward person and assured the public that it would not happen again.

"The audience will kindly remain seated," said the manufacturer. "The danger absolutely is passed. I can assure you that nothing ever will be shown at our mere 80 per cent of the picture houses that does not bring home the bacon.

"Art is all right if you want to waste your money on it for household purposes, such as covering up a hole in your parlor with a $10,000 painting that my scenic artist could do in an hour with a paint squirt-gun, but us picture manufacturers are not making any such costly experiments, especially when we know you good people will pay us the same admission for something just as good, like a great mountain feature made right in our clay-modeling department.

"For myself, you mind, for myself, I like beautiful things as well as the next fellow, if it doesn't cost me anything to look at them. But pictures have to be made to sell, and we know we can sell you our 1915 brand of goods same as during the last seven years.

"Why, if we began to give you art in pictures, the next thing we knew you would be wanting something else like the reduction of admissions on the bad pictures.

"We don't say we won't give you some of this here art, if the other fellow keeps coming along with it in his pictures until you all begin going to the other 20 per cent of the picture houses, and we begin losing some of our theaters, but let this here independent fellow be the pioneer and take all the risks, if he is foolish enough. When you all get used to it and you all want it, we will be right there with all the art we can buy at bottom prices. We bet you."

But this brainy argument did not settle the question for a large number of film critics, who had so much space to fill every week. They contended that the fellow who put art in his productions, was gambling to beat the band. They quoted some mighty fine productions which did not make a dollar. They quoted some mediocre pictures which did clean up.

The character of the productions answers the question in a general way for the puzzled writer. He may rest assured that what is termed "art" in the photoplay rightly belongs there, and will fight its own battle until something occurs at the box office to bring light to the Old Guard's understanding.

At present, art that will sell must be incorporated in productions which, first of all, are strictly "movie" in character. They must have not only action, necessary hokum and a plot that moves, but warm coloring and artistry as well. Being "movies," the public will come, and the box-office will rejoice.

But the strictly artistic production, even though it will "make them think," is pioneering in a virgin field, and box-offices do not pioneer in a virgin field.

Smart Answers

D. J. It was Booth Tarkington who wrote: "Don't worry about your lack of inventiveness. The characters make their own plot."

We don't know what Tarkington was taking for it at the time, but we know he would have recovered almost immediately if he had tried writing originals for the movies.

Donald, San Francisco: Once more; you cannot copyright scenarios. Uncle Sam will protect almost everyone, including the family cat, excepting the photoplay writer. But you can secure good protection by registering your story with the Screen Writers' Guild, Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood.

Frazer, Sydney, Australia: You did wrong to send your story to any studio. Send stories to some responsible agent who will submit to all the studios, saving your manuscripts long trips and yourself much time and postage. This is good advice for all foreign writers who have their optics upon the Hollywood market.

Colleen: If your "very odd" character does nothing which such a character would do, your story is all right so far as logic is concerned. Not a very brilliant reply, but the only one we can think of.

Old Writer: (Why do so many "old writers" come from Maine?) While some fictionists fail in attempting to write for the screen, those who have been writing action stories seem to catch on fairly well, after getting the right angle on photoplay construction.

Pomona: Try Universal, Fox and Lasky. The independent market is looking up from the distribution standpoint. It is widening. Therefore we believe that a much better market is in sight for writers, who will not be bound by ancient conventions and aged rules in plot construction.

Reader: The "simple" story calls for even more wear and tear on the old brain than most dramatic stories. To create five reels of deep feeling is some little job. But you can sell that kind of story if you can write it.

OUR CONTEST:

We are seeking ideas for valuable patents. Anyone providing us with a patent which will clean up a few hundred dollars for us, will receive the magnificent sum of $1,000; second winner, $50.

Plots to Order

AN eastern lady has invented a system for photoplay writing which probably will ring the gong on scenario instruction and cause many university students to take mathematics instead.

She has an index, with a noun, verb or adjective upon each card. Having fattened up the index, she was ready for business. Any day that an original plot did not descend from the skies and sparkle right in front of her optics, she would grab for the index, shuffle the cards and deal herself a plot.

Sometimes she gets a full house such as: Husband, wife, husband's friend, gun, undertaker.

One easily can see the advantage of the system. If you don't get a complete plot the first hand, discard and draw to fill. Continue this process until suited. Then write your story, mail it and begin spending the money.

It seems as though we have already seen some of these shuffled photoplays upon the screen. If so it accounts for much we never have understood. So many people are poor dealers.

Letters Home—No. 6

Hollywood, Nov. 3, 1922.

Dear Benedictine: I said when I got my first check for a skenario I would write. When I git the check I will keep my promis. Things is all stired up in the flum colony at the presently. Accordin' to them that are inside, the pitcher bizness is all O. K. and paloosa specially on payday. But them outa jobs says the bizness is goin' to the devil unless some competunt people, now on the outside, is given the jobs of the incompetunts holdin' all the studilum positions.

I havent made up my mind wich is right because a feller at the Mazuma studilum may give me a job, in wich case movies seem all right to me. But if I don't git the job I'm goin' to help expose the whole rotten bizness.

I can do it too becaus lots of magazines seem to be yearnin' for the howls of us fellers the movies ain't treatin' right.

CRANKSHAFT JOE.

Contemporary Criticisms

"THE OLD HOMESTEAD"

(Paramount)

"The Old Homestead" stands in a class by itself as a specimen of the real American rural drama which has successfully undergone the test of time and criticism for a decade. This feature furnishes an excellent example of the great advance which has been made both from a technical and artistic viewpoint in picture production. And there is no doubt that director James Cruze's work . . . deserves unlimited praise. The story throbs with heart interest, relieved by timely touches of comedy, the photography is faultless.

Chief dramatic honors go to Theodore Roberts in his wonderfully sympathetic characterization of Uncle Joshua Whitcomb, every member of a real "all star" cast contributes heavily to the picture's success. Not a single break occurs in the continuity and the action moves smoothly and swiftly from start to finish."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"James Cruze, through his production of the screen version of 'The Old Homestead' has lifted himself close to the pinnacle of his profession. He has made an even greater personal triumph in this production than has the star; not that Theodore Roberts has failed to exhibit his usual artistry, but because Roberts is always good and few productions bring such laurels to their designer.

"But all the credit does not go to the director. The scenarists, Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank E. Woods, are entitled to full share for taking a familiar, loved, but none too exciting rural drama and, without changing its structure or altering the theme making it over into a gripping, appealing drama."—Moving Picture World.

"When the list of the best pictures of 1922 is compiled, this magnificent production must needs be placed way up near the top. Here is film entertainment plus the greatest heart interest story of the stage put into one of the finest screen plays in the history of this industry.

"The Old Homestead,' in its present form is notable for many things. It has the most realistic storm scenes ever screened. An entire town is wiped off the earth by its fury. It is the climax of Theodore Roberts' career . . . this sterling actor contributes to screen literature a characterization that will be remembered for a long time. Correct in detail, realistically staged, artistically photographed and directed by James Cruze with punch, pep and action, it approaches 100 per cent in entertainment value."—Motion Picture News.

"The picture stands out from the market background as a model of merit.

"Theodore Roberts . . . establishes a record in screen portrayal which every good actor will set himself to duplicate. Harrison Ford . . . is not the delicate young chap screen followers know and like, but a normal country boy in difficulty whom screen followers will like better. George Fawcett is forbiddingly austere and powerfully impressive . . . James Mason advances a growing reputation as his scapegrace son. T. Roy Barnes . . . makes the only misfit character in the play fit perfectly. Ethel Wales scores consistently, though quietly, throughout the feature."—Exhibitors Herald.

"THE BOND BOY"

(First National)

"Score another hit straight in the bullseye for Richard Barthelmess! This ever popular star in his latest vehicle —'The Bond Boy,' keeps an audience on the edge of keen anticipation, moves the spectators to tears, thrills them with almost savage realism and carries them along on the sweep of an irresistible emotional wave to a wonderful climax. It is mighty good melodrama all the way through, beautifully photographed, directed with rare skill and presented by a talented company of players.

"Richard Barthelmess plays with grace and magnetism. The role is one that requires careful discrimination, nothing could be easier than to make it absurd by overacting, but Barthelmess never . . . crosses the boundary line between pathos and bathos. His work is sincere, natural and wonderfully appealing. Mary Alden fills the mother role with infinite charm, Charles Hill Mailes wins favor by a peculiarly impressive character sketch."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Richard Barthelmess, the star, and Mary Alden as his mother walk off with the honors as far as the acting is concerned. The action, as far as the direction is concerned, manages to forward the story in a natural manner that holds interest. There are one or two spots draggy.

"The Bond Boy' is rather an aged story and therefore perhaps good screen material without the necessity of very much fixing up, although the script writer did pick up a little touch of the 'Tavern' in the titling writing.

"Miss Alden displayed a power of repression that was wonderful."—Variety.

"Nearly all of the situations have been used before and because they are so obviously familiar, the director has found it difficult to build up any suspense. Probably it isn't altogether the director's fault that you anticipate things so much but he doesn't lessen that condition by prolonging the 'agony' and dragging the climax. The author has made his characters inconsistent.

"Director King provides an ample production for the most part although there are a few things that he has not handled very well.

"Barthelmess does very good work but the story is not worthy of it. He needs to overcome the very common 'movie' idea of registering nervousness by chewing his finger nails."—The Film Daily.

What Folks Think

MILITARY ETIQUETTE

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 29.—Editor Camera!—The large majority of American citizens who have had any experience of the life of British and other foreign armies, have had such experience during war conditions. During war, peace etiquette is almost entirely abandoned. This important fact seems to be quite overlooked when it comes to screen productions. Hence the many absurdities that are constantly committed.

But only one glaring example will be mentioned. What would anyone think if a guest turned up at a fashionable ball dressed in hiking kit? Have directors never heard of such things as mess uniform?

North Film News

The "Are You a Failure" company, a Schulberg all-star production with Tom Forman as director, stopped in San Francisco the first of the week on their way down from Eureka, where they had been working. The scenario is taken from the play of the same name. They had done three weeks work among the redwoods—ten days more at the studio should finish the picture. The company included Madge Bellamy, Hallam Cooley, Tom Santschi, Floyd Hughes, Hardee Kirkland and Sam Nelson.

On the completion of their present pictures the Motion Picture Utility corporation will temporarily suspend activities during a reorganization of the company. Their future plans will be announced shortly.

Kenneth McGaffey, publicity man, has severed his connection with the Motion Picture Utility corporation, and after a holiday in San Francisco, will join one of the southern companies.

Edward Belasco, president of the Belasco productions, announces he is so pleased with their new picture "Her Price," that just as soon as Dallas Fitzgerald, director, has finished overseeing the cutting, the next production of the company will be begun. The name of the new picture is not yet given out.

Irvin Willat, director for Metro, and part of the "All The Brothers Were Valiant" company, has just returned to San Francisco to shoot some scenes to complete the big whaling picture.

Isadore Bernstein, president of the West Coast Films company, is in San Jose for a few days.

Gouverneur Morris, author of "The Man Who Played God," and other successful stories of the silver screen, has spent most of the last week in San Francisco buying furnishings for his charming old adobe house at Carmel.

Alec Francis will arrive in San Francisco on November 4th, to be present at the California release of "The Forgotten Law," a Graf production, in which he plays a prominent part.

Kathryn Lewis leaves for Los Angeles the first of the week after finishing her work in "Simple Simon Simpkins."

Creighton Hale, after three weeks strenuous work at the Industrial Exposition for the Motion Picture Utility corporation, has finished two comedies. The first, "Simple Simon Simpkins," directed by Frederick Thompson, and a second with a working title of "Silly Husbands," directed by Gilbert Pratt.

Bryant Washburn, star of the silver screen comes to the Orpheum this week in a playlet called "Just As Advertised." He is supported by a good company headed by Mrs. Washburn.

AGNES K. CRAWFORD.

Wallace Reid will return from his mountain vacation the latter part of November to start work upon his next Paramount picture, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," the Saturday Evening Post story by Dana Burnett. Albert Shelby LeVino and Ralph Block, production advisory editor, are now working over the preliminaries of the story.

After a long siege of illness Jess Hilburn, wife of Percy Hilburn, head cameraman for the Reginald Barker company, died Tuesday morning from complications which developed after a severe attack of pneumonia. The sad news was a shock to the motion picture industry in which Mrs. Hilburn has many friends. Her mother left New York immediately upon being notified that her daughter's condition was reaching a critical stage.

The Editor Council announces the opening of a Western Branch, under the direction of Magda Leigh, at 6328 Homeward Ave., Hollywood, Calif.

The work of The Editor Council is summed up in the following statement:

WITHIN YOU IS THE POWER—or the knack, or the skill, or the talent, or the genius—that will enable you to write stories. Not in text-books on fiction technique nor in correspondence courses in writing—but within you lies the power.

The Editor Council recognizes this. Its course is an actual writing course. You are not given facts about the short story to memorize, or half-truths, or preposterous statements about plot and action, or futile exercises—you are given personal instruction that teaches you how to use your own power, how to develop your own technique, how to write your own stories.

The Editor Council shows you how to get ideas—your ideas—how to develop them, and how to write stories. It will help you to work them over, to make the best of your ideas, and it will familiarize you with the markets for your work. The course is an actual writing course. The constructive service—the criticisms, lesson-letters, and individual teaching of a personal instructor who is a competent, successful, critic-author—help you to use the Council properly.

Every student who perseveres with the Council learns to write and sell his stories.

There never was a better time to make up your mind definitely to succeed as a writer of fiction. The markets are opening and editors are deeply interested in the work of new authors. There is a decided movement, growing continually, away from the story of concocted plot interest to the story of character reaction. The Council foresaw this trend, and its methods and service are helping students to write the new fiction.

The Editor Council offers a Major Course, an Abridged Course, and a Short Course in Fiction Writing, a Course in Novel Writing, and a Short Course in Photoplay Writing, the fees for which are $110, $50, $25, $110 and $25 respectively.

A Folder of information will be sent to you on request.

Story By

The scenario for "The Drivin' Fool" is being done by H. H. Van Loan.

Victor Heerman wrote the story of "A Dollar Down," which he is now directing for Selznick, with Owen Moore and Alice Lake in the leading roles.

"Black Gold," written by Joseph Charles Northup, is in production at the Long Beach studios. The story is a romance of the oil fields around Signal Hill. It is being produced by the John P. Mills Productions, directed by Rex Thorpe, and photographed by Elmer Dyer.

CONTINUITY BY

Charles Maigne, "The Isle of Dead Ships," to be directed by Maurice Tourneur for First National at Goldwyn.

Lois Zellner, "Wandering Daughters," the first Arthur Jacobs special.

Four Years Ago in Hollywood

(From Camera! of November 3, 1918)

Allan Dwan is announced as Clara Kimball Young's next director.

Clarence Badger and his wife arrived home from the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee, N. J.

Lillian and Dorothy Gish gave a dinner and dance at their home Hallowe'en night.

King Vidor is to direct Booth Tarkington's Penrod stories for Brentwood Film corporation.

Louise Glaum was seen the other day wearing a startling turban made of peacock feathers.

Bert Lytell will leave November 15 for Camp McArthur to enter the Officers' Training school.

Clara Horton this week instituted suit against Triangle Film corporation for breach of contract.

Mary Anderson will play opposite William Desmond in her first picture for Jesse Hampton.

Priscilla Dean is vacationing while her next script is being finished. Tod Browning will direct her.

Sara Mason and Nell Newman, studio girls who have been ill with grippe, are able to enjoy the California sunshine again.

Irvin Willat, former cameraman with Ince, left Camp Kearny last week for Columbia university, to study war photography.

Edwin Carewe, director for Harold Lockwood until Lockwood's death, arrived in Los Angeles, Thursday, to direct Viola Dana at Metro.

"Viking Blood," by Ernest Shipman, for Sault Ste. Marie Films, Ltd.; fisher folk story by Captain William Wallace.

"Gentle Julia," by Booth Tarkington, and "The Shadows of the East," by E. M. Hull, for William Fox.

"Beau Brummel," by Mansfield; "Cornered," and "How to Educate a Wife," by Elinor Glyn, for Warner Brothers.

FLASHES FROM FRISCO

The Metro production of "All the Brothers Were Valiant," with a star cast including Billie Dove, William V. Mong, Lon Chaney, Robert McKim, Malcolm MacGregor, with Irvin V. Willat directing, is in its fourth week of work in San Francisco. Most of the work has been done on a whaler out in the Pacific.

Robert McKim has been wearing a crop of whiskers worthy of a forty-niner in "All the Brothers Were Valiant," while "Red" Thompson, daredevil of the silver screen, looked absolutely like sunset on the Golden Gate.

Robert Kurrie, big cameraman with the Metro, is thinking of giving up the camera for the gentle job of killing whales. He says it's great sport, and besides you get a hundred dollars a whale.

Charles B. Murphy, best known as a producer of animal pictures, Harry Cohen and H. R. Cushing have been in San Francisco this week getting locations for a new picture. Part of it will be done here, and the rest in Alaska.

Frederick Thompson, director for the Utility corporation, has finished "Simple Simon Simpkins," and is ready to cut.

"The Tiger of San Pedro" and "The Priory School" are the latest pictures released by Educational in its series on "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," from the stories by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

Los Angeles business men and commercial organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce, Realty Board, Motor Car Dealers' Association, Workmen's Civic League, California Bankers' Association, Women's Bond and Tax League, People's Economy League, and many other bodies, are against this proposal to load our properties with this huge mortgage---amounting to a $700.00 mortgage on the average home.

The picture industry has over $100,000,000.00 invested in homes and business equipment. Help preserve it from wreckage.

The newest movie bunco stunt is gyping thousands of small-town merchants in all parts of the country, Camera! learns. A supposed motion picture cameraman blows into town, seeks out the leading exhibitor, and wins his enthusiasm over a reel, to be furnished gratis, of persons photographed on the main street. The cameraman gets the exhibitor's signature to a letter approving the plan and promising to use the pictures.

Then the cameraman goes to one merchant after another, shows the letter, and sells them close-ups of themselves, and scenes in their business offices, for an exorbitant rate a foot of film. He secures the money, cranks an empty camera, does the same thing as many times more as he can, and skips town.

One such man cleaned up $460 in Kingstown and $750 in Wichita. Another secured $1500 from one oil man.

To Califilmia

SHORTAGE of coal would seem remote of any effect on the business of motion picture production.

Yet the eastern coal shortage—"speculation," Henry Ford denounced it—means much to the leasing studios in California. For even with the coal strike settled, there is not sufficient coal available for winter heating of New York and New Jersey studios. And, outside of "Nanook of the North" and the dramas of virile life in the snows of the great northwest, few pictures can be made effectively in the cold.

Many of the big eastern studios will be cold vacuums this winter, while producers migrate to a climate where artificial heating is unnecessary. There is Florida, Cuba, and California. And California is the only place prepared to handle a great expansion of producing activities on a moment's notice.

So this winter's non-availability of fuel may bring the last eastern laggards to the southland in almost complete centralization here of all film production.

* * *

Why I am ashamed of the movies

—Because there is no adequate distributing system for independent producers.

—Because companies such as Paramount, Metro, Universal and Fox force many mediocre pictures on exhibitors before they can show one worthwhile one.

—Because the screen is not conducting any campaign to teach the American people the un-Americanism of censorship.

—Because they are largely neglecting the great fields of informative pictures, of science, history, geography, art.

—Because they are still making pictures for the 14-year-old minds and are neglecting the 15- to 50-year-old minds.

—Because they tolerate the insulting attitude of American newspapers.

—Because they tolerate the existence of parasites who pose as motion picture people and who mulct the public by selling valueless stock and valueless "lessons."

* * *

Outside of that, the movies are all right!

* * *

Why I am proud of the movies

—Because they have advanced further in their first score of years existence than any art or industry in the history of civilization.

—Because such pictures as "Robin Hood," "Blood and Sand," "The Eternal Flame," "Remembrance," "One Glorious Day," "Our Leading Citizen," "Grandma's Boy" and "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam" are being produced.

—Because such as Charles Chaplin, Rupert Hughes, Rex Ingram, William deMille, D. W. Griffith, Fred Niblo and June Mathis are writing and directing pictures.

—Because such as Thomas Meighan, Will Rogers, Pola Negri, Douglas Fairbanks, Harold Lloyd, Conway Tearle, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray, Jackie Coogan, Richard Barthelmess, Pauline Garon, Jack Gilbert and Lillian Gish are appearing in pictures.

—Because Fox is filming "If Winter Comes."

—Because Charles Seeling will film "The Cruise of the Kuwa."

—Because Warner brothers will film "The Beautiful and Damned."

—Because Ferdinand Earle is preparing to picture "Faust."

—Because Harry Garson is filming "An Old Sweetheart of Mine."

—Because Sacred Films is picturizing the Old Testament.

* * *

Outside of that, the movies are all wrong!

TED TAYLOR.

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

"Prodigal Daughters," starring Gloria Swanson, directed by Sam Wood. Lasky.

Initial shots for Norma Talmadge's next production will be filmed at the Tombs and the Auburn prison in New York. It will be completed at United studio.

"The Leopardess," an unpublished novel by Katherine Newlin Burt, will be Alice Brady's next vehicle. It will be directed by Henry Kolker.

"The Isle of Dead Ships," by Crittenden Marriott, is the first of a series of four Tourneur productions which will be presented by M. C. Levee, through Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated.

NEW INDEPENDENT GETS CHARTER

Latest film organization to join the growing list of independents is the Camera Players Picture corporation, just been granted a charter. The organizer is William King, film and theatrical man. The company will put out a series of entertainment pictures with historical background, directed by King.

William E. Wing, veteran photodramatist, has been engaged to write the stories and supervise the productions.

The directorate of the Camera Players Picture corporation carries such names as Neal Harper, recently connected with Famous Players-Lasky corporation; W. R. Deming, Herman S. Shapiro, the attorney, and Betty McCoy.

WARNERS TO BUILD NEW STAGE

A large, modern, motion picture studio will be erected by Warner Brothers on their lot on Sunset boulevard. The new edifice to cost nearly $50,000, will cover nearly a complete acre, will be fire and weather-proof, and will have the latest lighting and stage equipment. There will be 100 dressing rooms along one side.

With the arrival here of H. M. Warner, oldest of the five Warner brothers, producers of independent motion pictures, comes a very important announcement of plans for Warner Brothers product for the season of 1923-24. The schedule as formulated by the five brothers calls for the production here of eighteen big features, at a cost of over $5,000,000.

Warner Brothers' policy is not only to make pictures with all-star casts, but to engage players who have been featured alone in former productions. Included in the roster are such famous players as Wesley Barry, Marie Prevost, Claire Windsor, Monte Blue, Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Irene Rich, Harry Myers, Louise Fazenda, Helen Ferguson, Tully Marshall and many others.

The Selznick company has decided to remain in California. November will mark the start of the filming of "Rupert of Hentzau," the sequel to "The Prisoner of Zenda." The motion picture rights were personally purchased from Sir Anthony Hope, the author, by Myron Selznick while abroad a few months ago.

Elaine Hammerstein will have the role of Queen Flavia and Tony Moreno will play "Rupert of Hentzau."

Victor Heerman will direct. Edward J. Montagne, associate editor of the Selznick scenario department, will have charge of adapting the story.

Charles Chaplin Directs

Charles Chaplin starts Monday a career as author-director. He will write and direct a series of society comedy dramas starring Edna Purviance for Regent Film company. The pictures will have United Artists' release. Rollie Totheroh is cameraman and Eddie Sutherland is Chaplin's assistant director. Monta Bell wrote the continuity. The first picture is untitled.

Baby Peggy is ill

Last Minute News

The people of Massachusetts defeated censorship of motion pictures at the state election.

Sid Smith has severed connection with the Hallroom Boys.

Fred Turner, character actor who played "The Jackknife Man" is seriously ill in a private sanitarium at 2471 Beechwood Drive.

Baby Peggy is ill with pneumonia.

DISTRIBUTORS COMING WEST

What is said possibly to presage the establishment of the distribution center of the industry in Los Angeles is the convention of exchange managers called by Jesse Lasky to convene in Los Angeles, November 20. Over 100 of the men who have the responsibility of distributing pictures for Famous Players-Lasky corporation will attend.

E. G. Patterson has been made sales manager for the Standard film laboratories. He is co-operating with John M. Nickolaus and S. M. Tompkins of the laboratory organization in promotion work.

Behind the Cameras

Don Short is an author as well as a cinematographer. He wrote the original screen story, "While Justice Waits," and also photographed it.

Walter Griffin, A. S. C., is shooting a Hartford production in St. John, New Brunswick. This is Griffin's second production for Hartford.

George Benoit, A. S. C., is photographing "Brass," which Sidney Franklin is directing for Warner brothers.

Allen Davey, A. S. C., will photograph the next Stuart Paton production for Universal.

Charles Rosher is making preparations to film "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," Mary Pickford's next production.

Walter Lindin is vacationing, following the completion of "Safety Last," starring Harold Lloyd.

Jack MacKenzie will turn the crank on "Rock of Ages," a Chester Bennett production.

Continuity By--

Charles Maigne, "The Isle of Dead Ships," to be directed by Maurice Tourneur at United studios.

Jack Cunningham, "The Tiger's Claw," story of East India to be made by Paramount; Jack Holt, star.

Marion Fairfax has written titles for "Hearts Aflame," recently completed Reginald Barker production.

Title Changes

"The Hothead" to "The Flaming Hour;" Universal production starring Frank Mayo, directed by Edward Sedgwick.

"The Summons" to "The First Degree;" Universal production starring Frank Mayo, directed by Edward Sedgwick.

"The Gringo" to "The Agent;" Vitagraph comedy starring Larry Semon.

"Coronation" to "Jazzmania," starring Mae Murray; Tiffany productions, Goldwyn; Robert Z. Leonard, director.

"A Kiss in the Dark" to "Blood Will Tell" to "Do and Dare," starring Tom Mix; Fox.

"Adam's Rib" has been chosen as the title for the new Cecil B. DeMille Paramount picture by Jeanie Macpherson which features Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Kosloff, Anna Q. Nilsson and Pauline Garon. Miss Julia Faye is the latest addition to the supporting cast.

Complete

"Weight for Me," Popular picture production, starring Fatty Karr; Bruce Mitchell director. Federal studio.

"When Civilization Failed," a Leah Baird production starring Leah Baird. Story by Dorian Neve. Ince.

"Farmerettes," directed by Al Herman for Century, starring Jack Cooper and Betty May.

What to Do

IF you paid a fee for registration; you paid a fee to be included on a "preferred" list;

—you paid a commission for a job secured for you by a "club";

—you paid for instruction in make-up or acting on promise that a job would be secured for you;

—you paid a fee in advance and failed to secure the job;

—you were promised work and did not receive it;

—you were given false information or were made false promises or false representation concerning an engagement or employment—

Call in person at the State Labor offices, 928 Pacific Finance building, 510 West Sixth street, file a complaint against the person or persons who defrauded you. The State Labor Commissioner will compel the agent to fulfill all promises or return your money to you, and will revoke the agency's license if it violated the law.

* * *

IF you were offered a job on condition that you purchase stock in a motion picture company, or on condition that you become a partner, purchase a "unit" or otherwise invest—

Notify the State Corporation Commissioner in the Pacific Finance building of the circumstances so that he can take action. Before buying any stock or interest of any kind in a motion picture enterprise, telephone Pico 3628 and find out if the company is authorized to sell stock and to operate under the corporation laws.

* * *

IF insulting propositions are made to you by anyone posing as casting for a motion picture or teaching make-up or acting—

Call the police department, Pico 6100, immediately, and report the matter to the detective bureau.

Crawford Productions

W. H. CRAWFORD keeps the nature of his activities pretty well to himself. He is cautious as to whom he confides in. In fairness to Mr. Crawford, it must be said that Camera! has received no complaints about him. But he uses the classified sections of the daily papers to advertise for people for motion picture work, persons "with ability," his ads say. As every person of ability qualified to act in motion pictures is registered in at least one of the many reputable agencies, why does Crawford have to recruit actors through the help-wanted columns?

Crawford leases space at the Caswell studio. This studio is also headquarters for Gaylord productions and for M. J. Lynch's acting classes. In the past it has sheltered Picturecraft Productions and a school of make-up conducted by Tom Ford. Here are some of Crawford's ads:

3 YOUNG ladies, 2 character women, ability, for motion pict. wk. Crawford,

THE schools of make-up are centers of eddying circles of graft, ranging from petty stuff of $10 or $12, to investments ranging from $1500 to $20,000.

There are as many variations as schools. The basic idea is (1) collect from $10 to $20 for lessons in make-up and acting; (2) split with a photographer an excessive sum charged for "professional" portraits; (3) charge for action "stills" or for a film test; (4) charge for "preferred" registration, or for dues in a "casting club;" and (5) if possible sell stock or an interest in a picture to be produced.

Here are some of the schools Camera! has dealt with in its series of "Truth About the Schools":

APOLLO FILM COMPANY, 319 Grosse building. Make-up school conducted by Michael J. Lynch, who charges $15 for six lessons, and promises work on completion of the course. As soon as he receives the $15 he persuades the "student" to sign a statement denying that work was promised. The Hollywood Film company at 311 Grosse building advertises for persons for motion pictures, and sends them to the make-up school. So does Bud Harris, who works from a desk at 734 Olive street.

ASSOCIATED ARTISTS, Balshofer studio, 1329 Gordon avenue. Make-up school charging $10 for course and promising part in pictures to be produced.

FASHION-INDUSTRIAL FILM COMPANY, 5444 Hollywood boulevard. Make-up school conducted by Max Asher, who harges $20 for the course. The company rents space in the hall of the Assistant Directors' association, but has no connection with the association.

FILM EXCHANGE, 643 South Olive street. Make-up school conducted by R. B. Wilcox, who charges $15 for six lessons. Under auspices of the state labor commission Wilcox is now refunding money collected by Scripture Films, Inc., which obtained much money for stock from church people, and promised employment in pictures if they took Wilcox's course.

SCREEN LAND, 308 Mason Opera House building. Make-up school conducted by Jack Pollo, former partner of M. J. Lynch. Charges $15 for six lessons and promises part in picture—when it starts. Picture Players' exchange, 418 Chamber of Commerce building. Ben Goldstein, manager, advertises for players and sends inexperienced applicants to Screen Land for instruction.

SELECT FILM COMPANY, room 330, 315 South Broadway. Make-up school conducted by Woods, who charges $15 for ten lessons. Advertises that picture is casting and claims to cast for several studios.

Caswell studio, Santa Monica and Bronson.

7 MEN, well-dressed, with ability, for motion picture work. Crawford & Caswell studio, Santa Monica Blvd., Bronson Ave.

"Ability" is the qualification in each advertisement. It would be assumed that experienced persons are desired. But Crawford really talks of methods of learning, even though the applicant has had experience. He also tells applicants he would have to see them in action before casting them for a part in a picture.

Crawford claims to have been in pictures since 1909. He states that he was Harold Lloyd's partner at one time. He talks learnedly of motion picture matters, perhaps criticizing the work of one well-known character actor, perhaps praising the methods of another.

Crawford states he is about to produce on a big scale.

A young lady who has had studio experience and who was not in the slightest need of "instruction" answered one of Crawford's ads out of curiosity. We'll let her tell it:

"Mr. Crawford was the nice young man that interviewed me, and there were some six or eight people waiting behind me. As I looked like a million dollars in my street clothes, and he being a wise young man, he made a special appointment with me for the next day. And I was terribly impressed when he said, if he was busy to knock and come right in!

"To make the story short, he said they were forming a private company and would let in ten selected people. They had six comedies all ready. Now, as this was something in which every performer was to divide the profits—after expenses were taken out—each person selected was to put in only $250.

"He said everything was ready, and when I asked, he said, 'Yes, even the release.'

"I firmly told him that I did not believe anybody had two dollars and fifty cents, let alone $250, and that I really felt bad to miss such an opportunity.

"As I had on a different outfit from the one I wore the day before—and it was some outfit—I could see that he did not believe me.

"And as long as I live I will feel that if I have to take in scrubbing for a living, it is my own fault, and I deserve it, after throwing away his splendid offer.

"Oh, yes, he said if for any reason after the first picture was finished that I wished to quit, why my $250 would be returned to me. "As my curiosity was much fagged by this time, I did not bother to ask—'when?'

In a recent article of this series a woman told of paying Crawford $7.50 to go on a try-out in Laurel Canyon, accompanied by a friend. Their names were not given. The article appeared Saturday. Monday, Crawford brought to Camera! the following statements:

"This is to acknowledge the following facts. That Mr. W. H. Crawford did not tell me that he would give me work. And that he did not tell me that I was a wonderful type, etc. But that he gave me a test picture for which I only paid my share of the film used, which I saw run on the screen. He also gave me five prints of all stills that I was in." (This was signed by the first woman).

"This is to acknowledge the following facts. That Mr. W. H. Crawford did not ask me to invest any money with him or to take any schooling of any kind. But he was giving a lady friend of mine a test and that I asked him if he would make one of myself, which he did. For which I only paid for the film used. He even gave me prints of the stills that I was in, free. He did not tell me that he was going to give me work in pictures." (This was signed by her companion).

Curiously enough, both letters were in the same handwriting, which was not that of either signature!

This is the seventh in Camera!'s series of articles exposing the methods of the schools of movie acting and make-up. Camera!'s declaration of war on fake schools was made September 30. The October 7 article dealt with Scripture Films, Inc., and the "film exchange" at 643 South Olive street; October 14, with the Hollywood Film company, and the Apollo Film company; October 21, with the Fashion-Industrial Film company; October 28, with the Picture Players' exchange and Screen Land; November 4, with the Select Film company, the Associated Artists, and the Caswell studio.

Back numbers can be obtained for 10 cents each at Camera! office.

Where to Find People You Know

W. Emile, a French fencer of repute, is exhibiting his skill in Mae Murray's newest production, "Jazzmania," in which he plays a captain of the White Guards. He was the original trainer for Douglas Fairbanks and played in "The Three Musketeers," "The Three Must Get Theres," and "The Speed King."

Gus Leonard has been added to the cast of Baby Peggy's latest special Century production, "The Senorita."

Twelve-year-old "Buddie" Messenger has been signed by Century comedies to do several pictures. He will start on his new affiliation some time next week.

Conrad Birk has been added to the Century comedy staff of gag-writers, and has been assigned to the Al Herman company. Birk until recently was employed with Harold Lloyd in a similar capacity.

Julia Brown, after finishing in a Lewis Sargent comedy, is engaged at the Federal studio in the Fatty Karr comedy.

Albert Rogell has signed Ann Little for one of the principal roles in his first independent production, "The Greatest Menace," a story based on the dope evil and written by Mrs. Angela C. Kaufman.

"Cap," Abe Stern's Belgium police dog, will make his first appearance in Brownie's next comedy.

Zion Myers tired of the sedentary life of being a casting director, so he exchanged jobs with Bert Sternback and is now assistant director for Harry Edwards at Century.

Irving Reis has been secured by Hunt Stromberg to photograph his production of "Rob 'Em Good" with "Bull" Montana in the star role.

Marguerite De La Motte and Cullen Landis are working at Louis B. Mayer studio in "The Famous Mrs. Fair."

Mabel Julienne Scott will appear in the leading feminine role of "The Abysmal Brute," at Universal.

Rupert Hughes will soon be ready to start production on his story, "Souls For Sale."

Frank Urson, staff director for Neilan, is now in England filming scenes for "Tess" of the D'Urbervilles.

Buddy Messenger has been signed by Julius and Abe Stern to appear in a series of comedies.

Herman C. Raymaker, late of Hal Roach and Hallroom Boys comedies, has been given a contract to direct for Century.

Jack Hoxie is on location in Northern California under direction of Robert North Bradbury in "Forbidden Trails."

Anthony J. Xydias, president of Sunset productions, now producing the Jack Hoxie series, has been laying plans for a new unit.

William Lester, author and actor, is playing in "Forbidden Trails."

Rhea Mitchell has been added to the all-star cast for "The Greatest Menace."

Sig Neufeld, film editor for Century, has been made head of the production department.

Charles Wallack has been employed to edit Century comedies.

Marjorie Marcel, English beauty, has been engaged to appear opposite Buddie Messenger in his first picture for Century.

Malcolm McGregor has been added to the cast for "Noise in Newboro," which Harry Beaumont is directing for Metro.

Ena Gregory, the Australian prize winner, has been re-engaged to play the leading human role in Brownie's next Century comedy.

Jack Mintz is with the Hallroom Boys' organization as gag man.

Thomas Wonder, six-year-old protege of Gus Edwards, is appearing opposite Baby Peggy.

Betty May and Joe Bonner are the chief funmakers in Al Herman's current Century comedy.

George Periolet finished with Mae Murray in "Jazzmania" and is playing in his fifth picture with Lasky this year.

Current Reviews

"The Legend of Sleepy Hollow"

AUTHOR: Washington Irving; Ichabod Crane: Will Rogers. The above combination is rather startling to read of but to see the results on the screen proves that Will Rogers has complete understanding of the quaint narrative and the role of Ichabod is glovefitting. Rogers plays the story straight. There are many funny situations and many producers would have forgotten Irving to develop laughs and make gags. But the beauty of this production is that in no way is it forced. The weird episode of the midnight race with the headless horseman lives up to our wildest childhood visualization of it.

Of course, the photography is a great part of the picture. Ned Van Buren was at the camera and he has achieved beautiful interior scenes and the night scenes in silhouette are most artistic.

Charles Clancy directed, and maintained the atmosphere of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" throughout. The settings along the Hudson and in Sleepy Hollow make the film more colorful.

Will Rogers as Ichabod Crane, the school teacher, is indeed an ancient looking individual. He fairly creaks with the spirit of the legend.

Rogers also wrote the titles.

There are many other clever people in the picture but having no way of obtaining their names we cannot credit them here. Our one thought is, how much clearer the story of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" will be to the school children when they see it unfolded upon the screen in an hour's time than it has been in covering ten week's time in reading.

"The Kick Back"

PICTURES of "The Kick Back" brand will increase Harry Carey's popularity with the children, because most of them are forbidden reading that sort of story from between yellow paper covers. Carey has all the talent and aid that money can buy but the story is the fly in the ointment, or something like that. It is the story that makes the hero a boob, keeps him in jail for three reels, in Mexico with all question of government protection left out, and then the 1898 vintage blood and thunder atmosphere prevails through the balance of the plot, then introduces a modern prohibition gag.

How Henry Walthall was ever induced to play a "little Nell" villain is, as yet, an unanswered question. Perhaps the thought that his name might place the picture on a respected plane induced the producer to secure the reputable artist. However, the absurdity of the part discounted the fact that a real actor had it.

Harry Carey engaged in many bar room fights and chases across plains and borderlines, but never did he stop long enough to do any real acting before the lens.

Ethel Gray Terry was badly cast. She is the society woman type and can wear gowns well but as the waitress in the desert town she failed to look the part.

Val Paul directed the erratic bit of action and George Edwardes Hall wrote the scenario. The story might have been directed in a less melodramatic manner just as it might have been written originally or translated from the original, but somewhere in transit someone slipped behind to the abc's of the movies and that's what the public will see.

Vester Peg, Charles LeMoyne, James O'Neill, and Mignonne were included in the cast. William Thornley and Robert DeGrasse photographed the picture and made some pretty exteriors.

"One Week of Love"

SELZNICK has tried out a new type of story for his star Elaine Hammerstein in "One Week of Love." The story is one of adventure thrills rather than a sex story as one might imagine from the misleading title. The most interesting part of the feature is that with the star we see Conway Tearle, not only a star in his own right, but a real actor as well, a combination not often hit upon.

The story of "One Week of Love" is of typical program material with its famous triangle situation, its railroad wreck, the washed out bridge, and the final clinch. It is nothing new but the action is interesting and the order of events is shuffled up a little differently. It is a picture for fans and tired business people. There is no moral to it, but it will neither harm nor benefit the young minds.

Miss Hammerstein is quite acceptable in the featured role. She is pretty and the fact that she does not attempt roles unsuited to her makes us appreciate her simple sweet interpretation and natural emotions.

Conway Tearle is forceful and earnest in a part that does not give him the opportunities that his talent calls for.

Hallam Cooley is well cast as the heavy and meets every situation most acceptably. Kate Lester, Frank Hayes, Sisco Mata and Thomas Duarte complete the cast.

George Archainbaud directed the picture, giving good suspense and adventure atmosphere.

"Dr. Jack"

WHEN Harold Lloyd was swept off his feet by the just praise that arose from "Grandma's Boy" he no doubt began to feel that his next effort ought to be a little more difficult. And so three persons took it upon themselves to write a story on the comedy-drama type. Hal Roach, Sam Taylor and Jean Havez contrived the vehicle. When the three finished the job it was a misfit.

As long as Harold played comedy he was great. We still laugh to remember the way he was railroaded from one situation to another. The first part of the "lunatic" gag was also a scream; the public roared. But when he attempted straight stuff with a bit of drama tacked on we lost sight of the Harold Lloyd we know. It does not fit him and he is not fitted for that sort of role. We have yet another quarrel with the story. There was too much plot to allow Lloyd to be his natural cheery self.

As to direction, we imagine that Lloyd had as much to do with it as Fred Newmeyer. Newmeyer, however, handled the balance of the cast capably.

Mildred Davis is appealing in her sad little girl role.

John T. Prince, who is billed as Mildred's father, was mistaken for the butler, due perhaps to being miscast or misled by the story. His work is good as the humble person he characterizes.

Eric Mayne, the villainous M. D., is thoroughly disliked and successful in his role.

Camera work is good, straight shooting, and beautiful exterior shots appear many times. Walter Lundin is the photographer.

"Silver Wings"

THE most recent sobby picture, heavy with glycerin tears, comes from the Fox division of filmland. "Silver Wings" is the God-bless-our-home type of picture with an unfathomable screen mother and crying men. The fault begins with the author. It is he who leads a family from poverty to overwhelming riches and then because of a mortgage falling due drops them back into the tenements again. It is the author who makes one of the sons a weeping man for three reels and then the other son joins him. The final scene, of course, has them all weeping, for joy we suppose.

Nevertheless the effect after seeing the whole six reels left us so maudlin that we were sorry to see so many cheerful beings in the world outside of the picture house.

The direction is credited to two people. Edwin Carewe probably started to make the picture. The first part of the picture looked promising. Then Jack Ford is named as a director, too.

The whole production is loaded down with titles, many that could be left out without further harming the plot.

Paul Sloane wrote the scenario. He caught the spirit of calamity and added sad, touching and impossible bits that the author had overlooked.

Regardless of story Mary Carr played her part with appeal. In fact her work was the redemption of the picture.

Knox Kinkaid as the older son and heavy was well read on how heavys should act. His work ran true to form.

Joseph Monohan as the younger son was unfortunate in having a weeping role. It is difficult for an actor to portray feminine emotions in a manly way. For that reason his work failed to convince.

May Beth Carr, the daughter, eloped early in the picture and did not appear until the last few scenes. However, she was sweet and sincere.

Others in the cast were: Claude Brooks, Robert Hazelton, Clark Short and May Kaiser.

Pickups By The Staff

HOLUBAR BREAKS ANKLE

Allan Holubar will resume work upon recovery of a broken ankle. The accident happened two weeks ago when he stepped from his automobile into a break in the pavement.

KERRIGAN'S MOTHER DIES

Mrs. Sarah McLean Kerrigan, 70, mother of J. Warren Kerrigan, and W. W. Kerrigan, manager of the Mary Pickford company, died at the family residence, Cahuenga boulevard, last week, following a stroke of paralysis. She is survived by three other children, Kathryn, Robert and Edward.

DENIES CONNECTION WITH SCHOOL

Harry Burns, president of the Assistant Directors Association, denies that any member of the A. D. A. ever offered a member of the Fashion-Industrial Film company any employment, and has a signed statement of the pupils of that organization that the above statement is fact. The Fashion-Industrial Film company rents the quarters leased by the assistants, as do others, including a church organization and a music teacher.

The Fashion-Industrial Film company runs a makeup school under supervision of Max Asher. It has also filmed a picture called "Little Miss Fashion," featuring Audrey Bruce, and directed by Harry Burns. The picture is to be taken on tour for one year by Valeria, with Miss Bruce and five of the girls, who appeared in the story.

Footlight Notes

Bryant Washburn is headlining on the Orpheum Circuit in Monta Bell's playlet, "Just as Advertised."

Will Rogers will leave the Zeigfield Follies at the close of the season to return to Hollywood where he will make short comedies under the Hal Roach banner. He also plans to appear in a stage play of Booth Tarkington's.

William Moran, who played John Wilkes Boothe in the Universal production of "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," has been signed to play one of the leading parts at the Majestic theatre of "The Champion."

Roy Atwell and Wheeler Dryden, both known to pictures, are now appearing in an original vaudeville sketch in northern California.

Invite Other Nations

The President, congress, and Latin-American ambassadors to Washington will be the invited guests of the city of Los Angeles and of the motion picture industry at the first annual Motion Picture Exposition and Historical Revue.

Further, the republics of Latin America will be invited to send representatives and exhibits to the show, giving it international scope.

These things were determined this week at a meeting of representatives of the motion picture industry with the mayor, city council, board of supervisors, a representative of Secretary of Commerce Hoover, and of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association, the World Traders of Los Angeles and the Clearing House association.

NOT AN "EXTRA" BIT

LOU Goodstadt's statement that there is no more extras in the movies as far as Lasky is concerned came forcibly to light the other day. Harry Burns, who has for past years directed Joe Martin and Snooky comedies, played what ordinarily would be called an extra bit in Cecil DeMille's new picture. It is now known as a part.

TRAVESTY MOTION PICTURES

The Patio Players will travesty motion pictures in "The Prodigal Son," a three-act play now being rehearsed at the workshop, 411 North Kenmore drive. The cast includes Edward M. Kimball, Chas. A. Smily, Jeffrey Williams, Alfred Hollingsworth, Nina Di Carrara, Henrietta Price, Karyl Marker, Raphael Bennett, Harold Varney, Aneeda Cherry, May H. Ralston, Clarence Ralston and Rex Lease.

The play inaugurates the second season of the Patio Players and will be staged at the Gamut theater, 1044 South Hope street, November 15, 16 and 17.

STUDIO IN PENNSYLVANIA

Albert E. Lowe, studio and laboratory expert, has been placed in charge of the Betzwood studio, near Morristown, Pa. The studio is controlled by Wolff Brothers, Philadelphia bankers who may finance independent productions there. The studio has its own laboratories, eating and sleeping accommodations for 200, a stage 160x180 and one 80x85.

Dispatches

D. W. Griffith's studios at Mamaroneck are closed and will remain so for the winter. Griffith is, however, looking for a good story which he could make down south, dealing with the cotton plantations and the old fashioned negro.

Triangle this week offered for sale negatives made under the old regime. It is understood that this is the initial move to end the affairs of the company.

PREPARES NEW COLOR DRAMA

LONDON, Nov. 7.—"The Virgin Queen" is the next production of J. Stuart Blackton. This picture, like "The Glorious Adventure," will be in natural color, improved with a new tinting and toning process. Lady Diana Manners will be featured, with the support of Carlyle Blackwell. Scenes will include the Tower of London, Westminster Abbey, Westminster hall, the throne room at Greenwich palace, and Temple Newsam.

HARTFORD IN FLORIDA

TAMPA, Fla., Nov. 6.—David M. Hartford and his company of 17 are here to film "Blue Waters" about old Tampa and Hillsborough bay.

"The weather experienced in New Brunswick made it impossible to continue our work there," Gavin Young, production manager of the New Brunswick Films, Ltd., stated.

The company is one of those launched by Ernest Shipman in Canada. Norma Shearer, Pierre Gendron, John Webb Dillon, Louis Darblay, Jane Thomas and Alice Lane are in the cast.

Nogales, Ariz., Nov. 5.—A film director and actor by the name of Walter Oland has launched a project for development of a motion picture colony at Palmetto del Verde, a small settlement near Mazatlan, Mexico.

FILM DOGS IN SHOW

Motion picture persons will be represented by their favorite dog champions and their trophies at the Hollywood Dog Show, November 17 and 18. Al Christie is chairman of the cup committee. Of 188 trophies, more than 100 are silver cups, many being donated by prominent picture persons.

Educational's new screen magazine, The Graphic, is presenting a series of pictures on great American champions. Among the first athletes to be shown in this series are Becky Lanier, champion equestrienne; Bill Tilden, tennis champ, and Adeline Gehrig, foremost woman fencer.

The Screen Writers' Page - Conducted by William E. Wing

Page Solomon!

Mr. Wing:

I am coming to you for advice. Several thousand of us who have given our best to the original screen plays, and who have worked long, well and sincerely, have received neither appreciation, remuneration or fair treatment.

In other words, the much advertised market for original screen stories—so far as the outside writer is concerned—does not exist.

Since we are unable to serve the market, despite our best efforts, would it not be wise to turn our literary efforts into another channel?

There always is a market for the good story. Magazine editors, always business-like and honest, are ever ready to extend welcome and a helping hand to the really talented new writer. This I know.

So much earnest effort has been utterly wasted by the freelance photoplaywright that it seems time for drastic action.

I'd say either we must change the market or must change the target.

Your opinion upon this subject, I am sure, will be greatly appreciated by many.

Sincerely yours,

B. ALICE ALBERTO,
Hollywood.

P. S.—One of my other grievances is that they do not return manuscripts. I have lost five within the year.

THIS arraignment is one which should win sleeve stripes for anyone sufficiently brave to agree with it. At least it seems to be the firm conviction of the above writer, and she judges entirely from experience gained right in the film center.

But to state that there is "no market" for the "outsider" does not exactly tally with the facts.

There are studios which sincerely desire original screen stories, and who search for them earnestly in the daily mail heap. And not a few of the productions now under way are those based upon stories purchased from the freelance.

However, it must be acknowledged that, since the so-called slump, the market has tightened, and all outside writers have discovered that sales were less frequent than previously.

Changing market conditions are to blame in part. At present a number of producers are turning to ancient stories, which once were popular sellers or popular plays during a previous generation or two. German spectacles also opened the way for costume and period screen plays, and several studios are pursuing the festive dollar while the going is good.

But, if the freelance writer follows closely the mind of the various studios by watching their character of production, they should be able to write stories which, at least, have a chance of sale.

As an example, the Schenck studio always is in need of stories for the Talmadge sisters. To write photoplays suitable to the notable Norma and Constance, one must write Norma-Constance stories, if you get the meaning. The type of stories constantly selected for these two stars should be a very good guide for the hopeful writer, although it is a fact that this studio, as well as several others, does give preference to printed fiction or stage plays.

Drawing by Frank Webb, 17, who had an experience with fake movie schools and drew this "for the cause."

Therefore when our correspondent asks whether it might not be policy for imaginative writers to turn to the fiction field, she echoes a query which has been in the minds of many scenarists who have observed the ready sale of some mighty thin published plots.

If our correspondent and other puzzled writers have the ability to write saleable fiction, they should lose no time in entering that field, for it seems to be the open sesame so far as studios are concerned.

As frequently noted in this department, printer's ink has a fatal attraction for film organizations, and there is no doubt whatever that action stories, if published first, find much readier sale than originals.

However, we insist upon the patent fact that the time will come when the original story, written directly for the screen and, therefore, sure to carry the best values and adequate material for a complete feature, will be sought eagerly at greater prices than the ailing fiction story. But when that time will arrive is as great a mystery as the attitude of manufacturers at present towards the efforts of scenarists.

A Picture Page

WISE fiction writers are taking a page from the book of motion pictures. Following the line of argument advanced by writers, a number of whom have not written for the screen, one finds precepts which might have been made anent the subject of scenario writing.

Ben Ames Williams is one of these. He expresses himself so interestingly in the Authors' League Bulletin, that his advice is repeated here for the benefit of writers, as well as to prove that fictionists have their eyes on that welcome second check from the studios.

Mr. Williams says in part:

"Mr. Pitkin's thesis is that a short story should be built about a 'topic.' This seems doubtful. It is more probable that the rules which govern the birth of a great short story are also the rules which govern the birth of a great play. Drama is the raw material from which short stories are made, and drama consists in conflict, in surprise, in contrast, in overthrow, in disaster, in success, in sacrifice, in achievement, in anything which stirs an emotional response from the audience. Substitute 'reader' for 'audience' and the result is a formula for the short story. Topics are the raw material not of the short story but of the essay.

"The writer of short stories does not seek to interpret life as fully as the novelist; he seeks to interpret life, not fully, but keenly. The novelist takes as his proper theme, in Mr. Pitkin's phrase, 'the manners and morals of our day and land.' But the short story is concerned not with the outward manifestations of human life to-day but with those emotional and spiritual reactions which are eternal, and the great short story could as well have been laid in ancient Greece as in California. 'The Luck of Roaring Camp' is a great short story not because it portrays life at the mines but because it deals with the emotional responses of rough and brutal men to the presence in their midst of a little child; 'The Outcasts of Poker Flat' is a great short story not because its figures were practitioners of the vices with which the mining camps were ridden but because it shows an ignoble man rising to the heights of a supreme sacrifice.

"Such episodes as these have always evoked emotional response in mankind; it is of such stuff that the great short story must be made."

Letters Home—No. 7

Careteria Blvd., Hollerwood,
Nov. 8, 1922.

Dear Murine: I said I would write you when I got my first check for a skenario, and you can depend on it. Now I am dropping you a line to let you know I have discovered why my skenarios has not went well. The scent-sers are to blame. It appears that a lot of folks outa work have discovered that ther mishun in life is to save a lot of people from danger that they didn't know they was in. Seems like the 50,000,000 people from churches, collidges and homes has been sink-in' their imortle soles by lookin' at pitchers which is so vishus that no one knows it but the scent-sers.

You see the people of these here U. S. wile able to run the govt., state and finanshul institoots, is babies playin with fire when it comes to choosin their amoosemints. No matter how brainy or ejacated, they are bums which are toyin with fate when it comes to pitchers.

So, with a guy named Sumner in N. Y., and several preachers which have to advertise their sermons to git a crowd, the sooper-human bunch is tellin the pitcher peeples what not to put in skenarios and pitchers. After readin the list of what not to put in, it would take moren the man that wrote the bible to indite a skenario wich these Solomons would let you put on the screen. As I aint no Solomon, what chanct have I got I'm going to ask Mister Hays.

Yours,

CRANKSHAFT JOE.

What Folks Think

COPYRIGHT PLAN ROUSES IRE

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 29.—Editor Camera!—Your courageous expose of the illegitimate acting and make-up "schools," those vultures who prey on the novice, should earn for you the earnest support of every self-respecting individual in the motion picture industry. For I believe that no small part of the present apathy and sometimes hostility towards the industry from the outside has been fostered by the pitiful tales carried back home by the many who have been "called" to Hollywood, urged on and on while their money lasted, and then cast aside, broken and discouraged.

Camera!, you are fearless and courageous. Therefore, I challenge you to another combat, another fight whose victory will wipe another ugly blotch from the escutcheon of motion pictures. I refer to that class of advertisements which separates good housewives and clerks, farmers and stenographers from honest money, and gives them in return only false hopes, insecure promises, and finally disillusionment, that they can write plays for the screen.

A time there was when a director's synopsis and continuity combined may have been scrawled on the back of an envelope, even as a time there was when shoes were made in the home with a piece of leather turned and tied with thongs. But today an honest pair of shoes is the result of specialized training and earnest prolonged endeavor, and even so a motion picture synopsis that will find a purchaser today will be the product of months of hard work preceded by years of study.

Let me come down to a specific case. There are many, but for the moment allow me to introduce to you one of your contemporaries, the "Scenario Bulletin Digest," described as "the open forum between the writer and the studio," published by the Universal Scenario corporation, 230 Western Mutual Life building, Los Angeles. This is also the address of the Feature Photodrama company. Either or both seem to have some connection with Universal Authors' productions.

Now, the "Scenario Bulletin Digest" doesn't claim to represent a "school," but its practices are as nefarious and ungodly as any "write for the movies" school that ever flourished.

Just pick up the issue of September 1922. Turn to page 21 and read of their "service bureau." If you wish to see your name on the screen as the author of the next feature attraction which comes to your town, submit your script at once. Don't delay. It doesn't want any difference if it is written in pencil on brown wrapping paper. They say so, right there on page 21! Incidentally, they charge only 2 cents a word for putting your idea in print, and, oh joy, it will be copyrighted! Think of it!

Now turn to page 27 and read the nine copyrighted synopses for which the combined aspirants paid something like $150.00. Read them, and weep, for P. T. Barnum lies mouldering in his grave. There isn't a producer in the world who would spend a moment's thought in other than pity for these nine sorry pot pourri of English words.

They pretend to large connections with the industry through carefully chosen material, even going so far as to show June Mathis' name on the cover as a contributor when they but copied an article which appeared in the American Cinematographer!

WM. S. VAWTER.

WANTS TO SEE HER

SEATTLE, Oct. 31.—Editor Camera! Won't you run, sometime soon, a picture of Mrs. Thomas Meighan? We who have heard so much of the happy married life of the Meighans are anxious to see the woman who has won and kept the love of the adorable Tom.

B. L. T.

APPROVES WAR ON FAKES

Paducah, Texas, Nov. 2.

Editor Camera!—I have been a silent reader of Camera! for nearly a year and it improves, I think, with each issue.

I heartily approve the stand you have taken against the fake concerns purporting to teach movie acting. Why not wage a similar war on those advertising to teach scenario writing through the mails? Thousands upon thousands of dollars are being paid into such concerns, annually, by poor unfortunates in every walk of life. I regard the latter the worse of the two evils, because the former catches only one class, while the latter includes humanity of all ages and stages.

I appreciate the fact that you suspended the rules for once and printed the letter from the freelance writer of Pennsylvania who omitted to sign his name. I am interested in his proposal, "A league for the freelance writers." I also note with much satisfaction your proposal to let Camera! serve as a forum for the freelancers of America.

Let's hear from others!

(Mrs.) L. W. F.

Four Years Ago

In Hollywood

(From Camera! of November 10, 1918)

Bessie Love began a new picture at Vitagraph this week.

Bessie Barriscale has decided to do no more "sex" pictures.

Ralph D. Robinson, Metro publicity purveyor, leaves Monday for Kelly Field, Texas.

Marjorie Daw, Beulah Booker, Dorothy Gish and Lillian Gish are ill with la grippe.

Helen Keller will finish her picture this week. She calls it "her message to humanity."

Ben Wilson and Roy Clements are making an independent feature at Universal City.

Frances Marion has joined the scenario department of the United States government.

Blaine Pearson, author of "The Lion's Claws," died of pneumonia during the epidemic.

Harry Carey has named his prize turkey Kaiser Bill, and will give it the axe Thanksgiving day.

Henry Walthall returns to motion pictures. He will work at National studio, where new stages are being built.

James Young starts Monday at Vitagraph on the first of the new series of Earl Williams pictures.

Mary Pickford's next picture will be "Daddy Long Legs." She has not yet selected her director.

Tod Browning has chosen "The Gutter Rose," by Harvey Gates, as the next Bluebird for Priscilla Dean.

"Whose Widow?" is Mary MacLaren's next starring vehicle to be directed by Ida May Park at Universal.

Motion picture and theatrical interests have been assigned $92,000 to raise for the Allied War Work fund.

Charles Ray has started a new Paramount feature at Ince studio. He will have a new leading lady, Colleen Moore of Selig fame.

Mary Pickford lost her suit against Mrs. C. C. Wilkenning, literary and theatrical agent, who is awarded $108,339. She will appeal.

After making one picture for Select here, Norma Talmadge leaves for New York Tuesday. Sidney Franklin, her director, will also return east.

Rumors: Universal has sold its contract with Lois Weber. She'll make next Anita Stewart picture at her Santa Monica boulevard studio. Mickey Neilan will direct Mary Pickford's next.

Yorska finished "The Infernal Snare" at Brunton studio. David Hartford directed and Richard Gordon Matzene was cameraman. Jack Cunningham scenarized Sarah Bernhardt's story.

Word received from Yosemite valley that a baby girl, Peggy, born to a government ranger named J. Travers Montgomery and his wife on October 26, may be a star in three or four years.

Julian Eltinge gave an informal dancing party followed the next day by an afternoon tea in honor of Beatrice Allen. Those present were Prince Axel of Denmark, Mr. and Mrs. George Fitzmaurice, Fannie Ward, Jack Dean, Kitty Gordon, Olive Thomas, Dorothy Dalton, Tony Moreno, Lew Cody and Kenneth McGaffey.

Mildred Harris and Charles Spencer Chaplin were married October 23 at the home of "Cupid" Sparks, marriage license clerk, it is just divulged. The romance is said to date from Lasky studio home fund night, when all film-dom gathered. Mrs. Chaplin will continue with Lois Weber.

Players belonging to the Motion Picture War Service Association are entertaining the boys at Camp Kearny during the quarantine. Lasky night Jeanie Macpherson, "Smiling Billy" and Mrs. Mason, Wallie Reid and his quartet, Crimmins and Gore, Hughey Fay, Carl Zessler and the Steven trio participated. Vitagraph night William Duncan, Harry Burns, Mr. and Mrs. Dell Harris, Benny Corbett, Edith Johnson, Walter Rodgers, Charles Reelock, Bill McCall, William Kelles and a company of girls and George Kabol did the entertaining.

Script Market

Popular Pictures, Inc., are in the market for two-reel comedies for Hilliard (Fatty) Karr. Stories should be similar to the old Roscoe Arbuckle two-reelers. Company will also consider two-reel comedies starring Frankie Lee, child actor. Submit stories in synopsis form only to Ward Hayes, Federal studios, 3700 Temple St., Los Angeles.

Universal wants comedy-dramas laid about the life of the average American working girl for Gladys Walton to star in. The problems, temptations and triumphs of the girl wage earner offer a wide field for the screen writer. Submit action synopsis of 1500 to 2000 words to Hugh Hoffman, production supervisor, Universal City, Cal.

Universal wants light comedies with plenty of action for Herbert Rawlinson. Submit synopsis of 1500 or 2000 words to George Randolph Chester, production supervisor, Universal City, Cal.

Contemporary Criticisms

"NOTORIETY" (Apollo)

"The author and director seem to have determined on getting away from the usual, at the same time taking a wallop at a question which has never before been handled in pictures. The fact that a great deal of newspaper notice has been known to bring joy and sorrow to those who have become its subjects is the theme."

"The story hinges well together and the characters are convincing. William Nigh has incorporated a full quota of his well-known touches. Maurine Powers in the leading part shows promise for the future, and Rod La Roque comes up to all expectations in a difficult part. George Hackathorne likewise distinguishes himself in this picture."—Motion Picture News.

"'Notoriety' is truly a masterly production. The pity is that there are not more productions like it. It is not melodrama, nor hokum. It's good, clean, wholesome common-sense stuff, blended into a picture that will live for no brief period. It delivers a message entertainingly and interestingly."

"Mr. Nigh has combined in 'Notoriety' all the elements of intelligent drama."

"The cast is a splendid one, with Maurine Powers as 'Pigeon' Dering carrying off the premier honors. Mary Alden as Ann Bøland is lovably motherly, while Rod La Roque never gave a better characterization than that of the 'divorce expert.'"—Moving Picture World.

"From the spectator's standpoint Mr. Nigh could improve the film by shortening it at least two reels. Maurine Powers has a delicate Lillian Gish appeal as the heroine. Mary Alden has the role of the tenement mother and gives it a sympathetic interpretation without overdoing its pathos. Rod La Roque is one of the most likable young actors on the screen and a good player as well. Mona Lisa makes Dorothy Wedderburn a vampish person. George Hackathorne is good as the half-witted boy and J. Barney Sherry as Horace Wedderburn."—The Morning Telegraph.

"TRIFLING WOMEN" (Metro)

"This is a story within a story, with the real story an impressive, highly dramatic and artistic conception. Rex Ingram again demonstrates that he is a director of the first rank. Not a detail is lost sight of; nowhere is emphasis misplaced; the climaxes are admirably built up; and the acting is very fine. Ingram proves again that he knows how to handle deep tragedy."

"With Seitz at the camera, the photography is superb."

"It will not be very long before Ramon Novarro will be recognized the country over as a real 'find,' one of those new faces for which the public is always looking. The same is true of Barbara Le Marr. Lewis Stone gives a polished, wholly excellent performance, as always, and we can understand readily why Ingram considers Edward Connelly's appearance in a picture an augury of success. Hughie Mack has a 'bit' which he makes real."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Mr. Ingram's direction of this production is superb and practically faultless. The story moves along at a deliberate tempo which allows the full force of every scene and act to be impressed on the spectator, and the picture holds your undivided attention throughout. It is from every standpoint an impressive production, handsomely mounted, pictorially striking, with many weird and even gruesome effects. Artistically the production is an achievement. To heighten the effect, Mr. Ingram has set the action in weird and bizarre surroundings."

"Probably the most striking member of the cast is Ramon Novarro, as the youthful lover. Here is a young man with a striking personality and undoubted ability from whom big things are to be expected. In his work and appearance he impresses you as a kind of combination of Rodolph Valentino and Richard Barthelmess."—Moving Picture World.

These were: Boy, Fritz Williams; Corresponding Secretary, Maclyn Arbuckle; Recording Secretary, Gene Buck; Treasurer, Henry Smith; Librarian, Edwin Mordant; Directors, to serve three years, Samuel B. Hamburger, Purnel B. Pratt, Sam B. Hardy, R. H. Burnside and George Nicolai; Director, to serve two years, Richie Ling.

Harry Houdini, the magician, filed a petition in the U. S. District Court for bankruptcy against the Octagon Films, Inc., which has studios in New Rochelle. Houdini claims $32,938 on a judgment recovered in New York supreme court and alleges that the firm owes him more than $25,000 on a contract to appear in films.

Monte Blue received painful injuries when a runaway horse dragged him 200 feet while working on a production for associated exhibitors. Blue was tied to the saddle. He is on location in San Juan Porto Rico.

"The Talmadge Sisters," is now available. It's a new book written by the mother of the stars. It is said to be a truthful account of the lives of the three girls.

Alice Brady will star in "Leopardes." Henry Kolker will direct.

T. Roy Barnes came east to do "Adam and Eva" for International. Now he is starting "The Go-Getter," the Peter B. Kyne story, but not from choice, for the Indian summer here is colder than "Kelsie's Knucks," and Tom Roy left his "Fur Boys" back there with his heart in Hollywood.

"Merton of the Movies" is scheduled for the Sam Harris theatre next month.

William Nigh and Bobby North are reading stories, seeking one for Nigh's next production, to start next month.

"Faint Heart," the first of the All-Star comedies featuring Ray McKee, Charlie Muray and Mary Anderson, has been completed by Gregory LaCava for C. C. Burr.

Barney Oldfield, Frank Chance, Motley Flint and Baron Long, who are attending the world series games, were entertained last night at the Hoozis Cafe in Greenwich Village by the Hon. Charlie Murray. Chas. says that mucilage was served in hard cups.

Mary Alden is back from Porto Rico, where she made a picture for McManus. Anita Loos is home from Bar Harbor.

Thomas N. Miranda, one of the best known laugh-getters in the film world, not being satisfied with international fame through his hilarious titles in "The Connecticut Yankee," and others (such as "Just Tony," "Mud and Sand," "The Fast Mail") too numerous to mention, has gone and done it again in Max Linder's rip-roaring burlesque on "The Three Musketeers," now playing at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre. As one Eastern critic put it—"from the cast title which followed the ever-annoying seal of the Board of Review to the well known title 'the end,' the picture is one continuous round of wholesome laughter." ## Flashes from Frisco

Arthur S. Kane of New York is at the St. Francis.

Irene Franklin is in San Francisco at the Palace hotel.

Miriam Cooper, Belasco star, is staying at the Palace hotel.

Marshall Neilan spent part of last week in San Francisco on business.

Jimmie Howe, cameraman, spent several days in San Francisco the first of last week.

Gloria Swanson is in town and was seen enjoying a canter in Golden Gate park the other day.

A. H. Rockett and R. C. Rockett, producers, spent the past week in San Francisco on business.

Jackie Coogan and his mother are here, Mrs. Coogan at the Palace and Jackie visiting his grandmother.

Oliver Eckhart has closed his stock company in the north and is in San Francisco assisting Irvin Willat.

Irvin Willat and eight of the "All the Brothers Were Valiant" company have been working at Half Moon bay all week.

Jacques Jaccard, director for the West Coast studios, has just returned after a five months' stay in Paris, and is at work on the continuity for "Red Shadows," his next picture.

Walter Law, heading a new motion picture company, the Golden Gate production corporation, will start work here in eight or nine weeks. Law is in Los Angeles completing arrangements.

Ina Williams, headliner in vaudeville on the Orpheum circuit, is making her first appearance before the camera in a Plum Center comedy. Miss Williams is staying in the west until early in December, when she will leave for New York to begin a new engagement.

In a crowd of forty University of California students used in a ball scene at the Civic Auditorium last Saturday, Mr. Thomson discovered one young girl who displayed such unusual talent that, after trying her out, the Utility corporation put her under a five-year contract. Her name is Aileen Patricia Lopez and she is seventeen years old.

I Work In Pictures—Almost

AS I was giving myself a weigh on the scale of a Hollywood drugstore a man approached me in a golf suit (the national uniform of the assistant director). He asked me if I wanted to work in motion pictures. As I did, I told him yes. He told me that I was a good type, and that he wanted some one with a mustache like mine. The worst part of it is that I have no mustache, but what he saw must have been a shadow from my nose. He injected a card in my hand and said, "Report at the studio in the morning."

Morning will soon be here, but where am I going to get a mustache? With difficulty I get an idea, and picking out a weak looking horse that was standing on the boulevard, evidently waiting for someone, I get the material for said mustache. Horse hair is coarse, of course, but with the aid of glue my mustache and I are united.

My arrival at the studio gate was greeted by a man who resembled a house detective. As rough as this gatekeeper appeared I went right up to him and said, "Well, here I am." He looked funny at me, as though he didn't know I was coming to the studio. I figured that the assistant director neglected to tell him to expect me, so I showed him the card that I had in my left hand. His attitude changed not a bit, but told me my horse was in a barn nearby which he pointed to. I followed his directions, but all the time knowing that I didn't have a horse.

When I reached the barn, another man, who tried to be as hard boiled as the gate person said, "I suppose you are a good horse-man." I told him "I suppose so" and as I supposed I also hoped that my horse would be gentle. I realized by this time that I was to ride a horse in the picture.

As he ushered, or rather ordered me into the barn he said, "Take your pick." When he said that, I realized that there was more than one horse, but it sure was nice of him to let me choose which one I wanted. As I was taking my choice, he helped me by bringing one over to me, and telling me that this was the horse I was to ride. I petted the animal, and it looked at me with a sad expression on its face. I hate sad expressions, particularly on a horse, and so I petted it some more.

The horse stared at my mustache, and then at its tail, putting it over that he recognized me as the gink that cut part of its tail off. I wanted to be nice to the enraged animal and started to ask him how he got into the picture business. He interrupted this question by making a pass at me with his hind legs, and believe me the battle was on. I can't describe the affair very intelligently, but the last thing I remember saying was, "Well, that's a horse on me."

With Toreador

Pretty soon writers will wake up and demand coin for the burlesque rights to their story, along with dramatization, picturization and novelization rights.

* * *

Now there are three Hollywoods—in California, Illinois, and Florida. One of Miami's suburbs is thus christened.

* * *

AHA! THE "CHRISTY MAN!"

Howard Chandler Christy has painted a portrait of Will H. Hays.—News Item.

* * *

The ingenue hurled the pie at the comedian.

"I like your crust!" he replied.

* * *

Motto of girls who become acquainted with actors: "It's better to have loved and lost than never to have breach of promise grounds."

The P. A.'s Friends

The Champaign (Ill.) Evening Herald will start November 15.

The Falls Evening Tribune has started at International Falls, Minn.

The Patterson (N. J.) Times made its first appearance the morning of November 1.

The Pottsville (Pa.) Morning Paper is a new daily from the plant of the Pottsville Republican.

Melbourne, Australia, has a pictorial tabloid morning paper called the Sun News-Pictorial. It started September 11.

Will Rogers will become a fellow contributor to Life with Robert E. Sherwood. Rogers will not confine himself to motion pictures, however.

Hector Charlesworth, dramatic editor of Toronto (Ontario, Canada) Saturday Night, has been elected vice-president of the Toronto Arts and Letters club.

Chester B. Bahn is drama and screen editor of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Telegram and Sunday American, succeeding Irene Murray. Bahn's place on the Syracuse Journal will be taken by Franklin H. Chase.

Monta Bell, former editor of the Washington Herald, is publicity director for Charles Chaplin. Carlyle Robinson resigned and went to New York to enter the real estate business with Richard K. Fox, his father-in-law, and publisher of the Police Gazette.

Exhausts

From Al Martin

We heard that Nanook, the Eskimo Valentino, is going to make personal appearances with his family. To make them feel at home they should be given a cold reception.

William Irvin claims that Kid McCoy's picture, "His Tenth Bride," is so good Jesse Lasky wants to make a serial of it.

Bobby Vernon's last one is "Choose Your Weapons." If it doesn't make any difference to you, Bobby, we'll wait 'til we see the picture.

Leo White recently returned from a visiting trip abroad. However, he is still visiting here. (This is not an advertisement.)

Harold Lloyd's "Dr. Jack" is a knockout even though he does not write his stories, direct and star in them.

Marvelous how pictures can get over with just a little advertising. For instance, "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Nell Craig plays the school teacher in "The Abysmal Brute." Oh, teacher, may I stay after school?

Will Hays says that he is going to reform all office boys. Why pick on children?

Breezy Eason took William Desmond and Laura La Plante from India to China this week in "Eighteen Days Around the World," which proves that pictures are getting more practical.

News item: William Worthington is making "The Bolted Door." Sounds like a carpenter's job, doesn't it?

Al Christie has finished "Chop Suey." To carry out the idea why not cut the picture with chop sticks?

Walter Long and other stars are in "The Little Church Around the Corner." Who says it doesn't pay to go to church?

"The Noise of Newboro" is Harry Beaumont's working title for Viola Dana's latest. Why not call it "A Quiet Evening in John's Restaurant."

Book Reviews

"Her Last Fade-Out," by Harry B. Smith (Smart Set, November).—The author of this amusing, playfully sarcastic short story is the same member of the Smith family whose name so often follows the words, "Book by—" between the title of the musical comedy and the first corset ad in your theater program. The story's a combination of "Editha's Burglar" and "Turn to the Right" in the J. Scott Fitzgerald manner, and has for heroine an eternally youthful film star. Some comedy producer who wants to set a new fashion in film burlesques should fire the man who thinks up punning parody titles like "When Nighties Were in Shower" and "The Gin Flood," and use his salary to purchase screen rights to "Her Last Fade-Out."

Overheard

There's no timeclock on Cecil DeMille's set. When the director secures the proper tempo his company resigns itself to work until the sequence is finished. Sometimes the company is pleasantly surprised.

Last Friday Theodore Kosloff, Milton Sills, Joan Corrado and others rehearsed strenuously for a scene in "Adam's Rib." Six o'clock and they were still rehearsing.

"Well, how did it seem to you that time?" DeMille asked Sills.

"Fine." Others nodded in approbation.

"Well—we'll shoot it Monday morning at 10 o'clock!"

* * *

Eric von Stroheim may join Lasky. Or Goldwyn. Or International.

* * *

Emmett Flynn may join Lasky.

* * *

Phil Rosen is no longer with Lasky.

* * *

Joe McKloskey, New York film manufacturer, and his wife, are going to sue Hollywood hotel because of alleged loss of clothing and valuables from their apartment.

* * *

Wheeler Oakman and Priscilla Dean have moved into their new Beverly Hills home.

The tide turns

NOVEMBER 7, 1922 may prove to be the Independence day of the motion picture industry.

On that day the people of Massachusetts voted against motion picture censorship after it had been given a thorough trial in that commonwealth.

On that day Al Smith was elected governor of New York.

What connection has the governor of New York with the motion picture business at large? Oh, not much, except that Al Smith's first message to the New York legislature will recommend abolition of the notorious, wasteful and unsuccessful motion picture commission of that state.

Massachusetts and New York were the last recruits to that group, comprising Kansas, Maryland, Ohio and Pennsylvania, that blushes at baby clothes and denies its citizens freedom of the see.

The establishment of censors in New York and Massachusetts placed a total of nearly 32,000,000 persons directly under censorship in the United States of America. Automatically this placed other millions, dependent for their films on exchanges, in censorship states, also under censorship. The 1920 population of the United States was 105,000,000.

For the past year one-third of all Americans were under the Middle Ages oppression of censorship!

But on November 7 Massachusetts shook off its shackles. Will Hays aptly compares it to the Boston tea party.

"They're starting another party now that is just as insignificant," says Hays. "It was censorship which caused the revolution and made the United States. You cannot censor the people's rights to act and think and see for themselves."

And on November 7, with the motion picture and amusement people behind him, Al Smith was elected governor of New York. This presages the emancipation of 10,000,000 more persons from the tyranny of the censor.

Four censor states remain, but not for long, we hope.

Register optimism, please!

Four years ago Hollywood was in the joyful throes of a production boom.

Armistice had been declared in the World War. Many who had been ill of influenza were recovering. There was excited bustling in every studio.

There had been only 29 units active. These included three serials and eleven comedy companies.

Camera! of November 17, 1918 carried a jubilant bannerline, "PRODUCTION BEGINS ON ENORMOUS SCALE," and recorded the starting of 23 additional feature pictures. Everyone was happy—52 units were working!

Today—long faces—"nobody working"—"don't know what the business is coming to!"—gloom.

Yet last week there were 93 companies in action. Sixty-three were making features; 25, short subjects; 4, serials.

This week—run down the Pulse of the Studios and see for yourself. The industry is more active today than it was in that joyous boom week four years ago. Further, it's more stable and is doing better things.

* * *

No credit for the dead

When William D. Taylor's picture, "The Top of New York," was shown at Grauman's theater this week, the title crediting Taylor as director was loped off.

Another undeserved insult to the dead.

Taylor directed the picture. It was not his best picture. But he took keen delight in making it, especially in working with little Mary Jane Irving, who he declared was the most natural and charming child actress he had ever directed.

It was Taylor's picture. The fact that a few months after the picture was made a drug-crazed fiend, or the hireling of one, murdered Taylor doesn't change the fact that Taylor made the picture, delighted in doing so, and was entitled to have his name on it.

Whether William D. Taylor's just credit was omitted from "The Top of New York" by an official of Famous Players-Lasky studio, or whether it was done in the theater at the order of Sid Grauman or one of his men, doesn't matter. It is an insult to Taylor not readily to be forgiven.

TED TAYLOR.

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

"Rupert of Hentzau," a sequel to "The Prisoner of Zenda," Selznick production featuring Elaine Hammerstein and Bert Lytell.

Val Paul has started directing Harry Carey at the Powers studios in "Canyon of the Fools," Carey's fourth starring vehicle for F. B. O. The story is an adaptation of Richard Mathews Hallett's story, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Long Skirts" is announced by Bruce Mitchell as the title of the next two-reel comedy starring Fatty Karr, filming of which will commence this week at Federal.

"Your Friends and Mine" will start at Metro next week by the Sawyer-Lubin unit.

Viola Dana starts "Her Fatal Millions" next week, when "The Noise of Newboro" is finished.

Baby Peggy's next production for Century, "Grandma's Girl," is again under way. The little starlet has returned after her illness.

The Mogi brothers' second reelaugh, "The Three Vagabonds," with Tiny Bebe Ellen, Max Mogi and the dog "Buster."

"HUNCHBACK" CASTING

Charles P. Stallings has been assigned as production manager for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Wallace Worsley is to direct for Universal. Casting will start next week. Stallings is also in charge of the Tod Browning and Hobart Henley units.

Katherine MacDonald's next picture adapted by Lois Zellner, is titled "Refuge." The new picture will be directed by Victor Schertzinger and will be presented by B. P. Schulberg of Preferred Pictures through First National.

Norman Dawn reports that he will take a company into Alaska next March for a he-man production. George Madden will accompany him as cameraman.

Jesse D. Hampton is preparing to launch a new version of "The Spoilers" at Metro.

Maurice Tourneur has selected for his first production a story adapted from a novel, "The Isle of Dead Ships," by Crittenden Marriott.

Rupert Hughes will direct the production of "Souls for Sale," from his own adaptation of his novel and he will also title and edit it. Production will start soon.

King Vidor is Clara Kimball Young's director in her third Metro release, "The Woman of Bronze." John Bowers, Lloyd Whitlock, Edward Kimball, Kathryn McGuire and Edwin Stevens are in the cast.

Rex Ingram will make "Scaramouch" at Metro studio in the west, Joseph Engel announced on his return to Los Angeles this week. Ingram is filming final scenes of "Where the Pavement Ends" at the Miami studio.

WILL "MAKE HIS OWN"

Cullen Landis is to make his own productions, when he concludes his juvenile role with Fred Niblo in "The Famous Mrs. Fair." Landis will star in his pictures. Definite plans are being made for the new release.

Jackie Morgan is appearing in Brownie's latest Century, now in production.

MAC LEAN JOINS PRODUCER'S RANKS

Douglas Mac Lean has turned independent producer and will devote the coming year to filming a series of big comedies for release by Associated Exhibitors. Mac Lean's initial vehicle will be a screen version of a very successful stage comedy. Lloyd Ingraham will direct the new series. George Crone, who has been Ingraham's assistant for several years, will continue in the same capacity.

Bogart Rogers will be general manager of the new company.

Work on the first picture will commence within the next two or three weeks.

FIRST NATIONAL TO PRODUCE

First National may enter the production field of motion pictures on a large scale. Richard A. Rowland, new general manager, is due in Los Angeles tomorrow to discuss plans for production with western officials. Rowland will urge, it is expected, that the Richard Barthelmess, Hope Hampton and Edwin Carew units move to Los Angeles.

WALKER TO PRODUCE

Johnnie Walker, the juvenile, who was recently elevated to stardom by the Robertson-Cole organization, makes his debut as a producer.

Mr. Walker has just secured screen rights to H. C. Witwer's "Fourth Musketeer" as the vehicle for his initial producing venture.

William Kerrigan Howard is director and Lucien Andriot is cinematographer.

Lee Moran will film Ring Lardner's "You Know Me, Al" stories on his return to Los Angeles.

Screen Right Purchased

By Goldwyn Pictures corporation, story by Gerald Beaumont, "The Gambling Chaplain."

By Richard Walton Tully to "Trilby," by George du Maurier, for Guy Bates Post to star as Svengali. (Rights bought from World Film corporation, which produced it in 1915 from the play by Paul M. Potter.)

By Jesse D. Hampton to "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach. (Purchased from Col. William N. Selig, who made it in 1914, for $65,000 and half the profits.)

By International Story company to "Amy Robsart," "Invisible Husbands," "Lopez Illusion," "The Red of Midnight," "Mlle. Mars" and all other works of Edward Elsnor, co-adaptor of "Under Two Flags" for the stage. (Purchase thought to be for Hearst Film companies.)

By Goldwyn to "Wild Oats Lane," play George Broadhurst wrote from story by Gerald Beaumont called "The Gambling Captain."

By David M. Hartford to "Bulldog Carney," by W. A. Fraser for series to be produced in Canada.

Continuity By—

A. S. LeVino, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," from the story by Dana Burnett, Wallace Reid's next starring picture.

Jane Murfin started work on the scenario for Strongheart's third First National picture. The title has not yet been decided upon.

Title Changes

"The Black Domino" to "The Broadway Madonna." Harry Revier, eastern studio production starring Dorothy Revier. F. B. O. release.

"Cold Courage," is the new name of the Ben Ames Williams story, formerly called "All the Brothers Were Valiant." Lon Chaney and Billie Dove appear in the picture.

Complete

"Rob 'Em Good," starring Bull Montana, Metro.

"Miles Brewster and Super-Sex," all-star production, directed by Lambert Hillyer, at Hollywood studio.

Oliver Morosco's film feature, "Slippy McGee," First National release. Colleen Moore and Wheeler Oakman have the leading roles.

The first independent production of Rollin Sturgeon and Lucien Hubbard, "What's Your Daughter Doing?" is nearing completion at Universal City. The story is one of Hubbard's, scenarized by him and directed by Sturgeon.

Henry McCarty has completed production of Lester Cuneo's latest western, "The Vengeance of Pierre," and will start work shortly at the Fine Arts studios on the last picture of his series for Western Pictures Exploitation.

Truth About the Schools

THE fake schools of make-up are centers of eddying circles of grift, ranging from petty stuff of $10 or $12, to investments ranging from $1500 to $20,000.

There are as many variations as schools. The basic idea is (1) collect from $10 to $20 for lessons in make-up and acting; (2) split with a photographer an excessive sum charged for "professional" portraits; (3) charge for action "stills" or for a film test; (4) charge for "preferred" registration, or for dues in a "casting club;" and (5) if possible sell stock or an interest in a picture to be produced.

The fake schools of make-up and acting are thoroughly scared. They cannot stand the searchlight of publicity.

Publicity is the life breath of legitimate motion picture activities, but under it the fakes wither up and die.

Camera!'s campaign against those parasites that prey on the unsophisticated is no nine weeks wonder. It will continue to seek out and expose the grafters on the fringe of the motion picture industry whenever and wherever they may be found.

THE week's developments in the war on fake film schools are as follows:

Sunday the Los Angeles Times launched a series of articles telling experiences of women reporters who answered classified ads and took make-up courses with M. J. Lynch of the "Apollo Film company" in the Grosse building, R. B. Wilcox of the "Film Exchange" at 643 South Olive street, and Jack Pollo of "Screen Land," 308 Mason Opera House building. Three articles have been published each day.

A flashlight photograph was taken in Lynch's class and printed in the Times.

Front page cartoons depicting the luring of screen struck girls by fake school promoters were printed in the Record and the Times.

A hearing was called Thursday in the state labor commission offices for swindled and disgruntled "graduates" of fake film classes.

Louis Harper, apparently a dignified, white-haired gentleman, was tried in police court Monday as the result of complaints of girls who told of being lured to the Balshofer studio at 1329 Gordon street through ads offering picture roles.

C. C. Stephens awaits trial for attempting to attack a young woman who called at his office, room 327, at 218 South Broadway, where he advertised for girls to register for picture work.

Investigations by state and city officials are under way of other schools mentioned in Camera! articles, against which complaints have been made.

"Acting by Mail"

WHILE the ads of movie schools have dotted "help wanted" columns of Los Angeles newspapers for months, luring young and pretty and foolish to spend their money for useless "lessons"—and to lose ultimately perhaps more than money,—the business of teaching make-up and acting is not merely a local matter.

Some of the fake film schools in Los Angeles operated a nation-wide mail order business.

"Acting and make-up taught by mail!"

Along with the ads of the great correspondence schools teaching commercial trades and professions, along with the schools that profess to teach speed typewriting, fingerprint investigating, newspaper writing—all in a few simple, easy lessons by mail—ran ads:

"WANTED—New faces for motion pictures."

The credulous wrote to the Los Angeles address—on Olive street or Sixth street or in Hollywood.

In reply they received in writing what the Los Angeles dupes here verbally—glowing statements of the opportunity in motion pictures for new types and faces. The letter usually included a promise that railroad fare to Los Angeles would be advanced the applicant, and that a studio job of at least $75 a week would be obtained for him or her.

First, though, a knowledge of make-up was essential. Without it there was no chance in the studios. With it, fame and fortune was assured. The complete course of lessons—and the make-up kit and all—would be sent for a paltry $6.35.

On receipt of the $6.35 the lessons and kit were sent exactly as promised—at a profit of only 200 per cent. And that ended the matter. Further letters asking about the promised railroad fare to Los Angeles, and the promised $75 studio job went unanswered.

In many, many cases the screen-crazy girl or boy would scrape up, somehow, somewhere, enough money to come to Los Angeles anyway and claim that job. Then they fell into the hands of the same or of new instructors in make-up and acting, and trudged the same hopeless path with the other dupes.

Nor were the "students" the only ones swindled by the fake schools. Newspapers unwise enough to print the ads on credit were often swindled out of pay for them. The ads were placed under a fictitious name. When the bills came in, "Why I didn't place that ad; that's someone else; they're responsible," said the instructor.

With the amount involved only a few dollars and long distance investigation and legal action difficult and expensive, the matter was dropped by the newspapers.

The New York American was one paper thus used and thus duped by a mail-order school, according to the instructor's own assistant.

* * *

A young Greek in Chicago who is trying to be a scenario writer answered an ad of the Producers Film Exchange, 730 South Olive street, Los Angeles, R. B. Wilcox, manager, that on the face of it sought new types for pictures. In response to their letter he purchased a make-up kit for $5 and was told to send his photograph with make-up on and they would then secure a position for him.

A young man in a small Oregon city received glowing letters from Los Angeles. He gave up his job and came here to take Lynch's make-up course. After he had paid the fees, bought make-up and photographs, and registered at an agency, he waited hopefully for his first job. Finally in disgust he announced he was going to the studios himself to seek work.

"Don't do it! Don't do it!" he was told, and then was initiated into a "preferred registration" club that charged $1 a month.

The card was for "The R. B. W. Film and Photoplay Exchange," and it read:

"This card entitles bearer to register with this agency for work, on our preferred extra list. No commission will be charged on one position a month. Membership fee $1 monthly."

Then, after the signature of E. Snead, secretary, in small type:

"It is not compulsory that anyone join the R. B. W. Club to register with this agency."

Still no work. When the $600 savings the youth brought with him was nearly all spent in living expenses while he was loafing, he went back to Oregon and started at his old job again.

* * *

Others from Oregon, from Illinois, from New York, flock to Los Angeles in response to alluring, misleading ads and letters. If they have money to live on while they loaf, the way is clear.

If they haven't enough money they do other things. What? It's hard to say.

It's only too easy for a desperate youth, down to his last dollar, to turn hold-up; for a girl, in despair, to turn to the streets.

HERE are some schools Camera! has dealt with in its series of "Truth About the Schools":

APOLLO FILM COMPANY, 319 Grosse building. Make-up school conducted by Michael J. Lynch, who charges $15 for six lessons, and promises work on completion of the course. As soon as he receives the $15 he persuades the "student" to sign a statement denying that work was promised. Lessons in acting are given each Sunday at Caswell studio. The Hollywood Film company at 311 Grosse building advertises for persons for motion pictures, and sends them to the make-up school. So does Bud Harris, who works from a desk at 734 Olive street.

ASSOCIATED ARTISTS, Balshofer studio, 1329 Gordon avenue. Make-up school charging $10 for course and promising part in pictures to be produced.

FASHION-INDUSTRIAL FILM COMPANY, 5444 Hollywood boulevard. Make-up school conducted by Max Asher, who charges $20 for the course. The company rents space in the hall of the Assistant Directors' association, but has no connection with the association.

FILM EXCHANGE, 643 South Olive street. Make-up school conducted by R. B. Wilcox, who charges $15 for six lessons. Under auspices of the state labor commission Wilcox is now refunding money collected by Scripture Films, Inc., which obtained much money for stock from church people, and promised employment in pictures if they took Wilcox's course.

SCREEN LAND, 308 Mason Opera House building. Make-up school conducted by Jack Pollo, former partner of M. J. Lynch. Charges $15 for six lessons and promises part in picture—when it starts. Picture Players' exchange, 418 Chamber of Commerce building, Ben Goldstein, manager, advertises for players and sends inexperienced applicants to Screen Land for instruction.

SELECT FILM COMPANY, room 330, 315 South Broadway. Make-up school conducted by Woods, who charges $15 for ten lessons. Advertises that picture is casting and claims to cast for several studios.

This is the eighth in Camera's series of articles exposing the methods of the schools of movie acting and make-up. Camera's declaration of war on fake schools was made September 30. The October 7 article dealt with Scripture Films, Inc., and the "film exchange" at 643 South Olive street; October 14, with the Hollywood Film company, and the Apollo Film company; October 21, with the Fashion-Industrial Film company; October 28, with the Picture Players' exchange and Screen Land; November 4, with the Select Film company, the Associated Artists, and the Caswell studio; November 11, with Crawford production.

Back numbers can be obtained for 10 cents each at Camera! office.

Ernest Palmer, noted cinematographer, has returned from England to the Louis B. Mayer forces to rejoin the John M. Stahl company as chief photographer.

Current Reviews

"Tess of the Storm Country"

IT IS doubtful if the most ardent defenders of reincarnation would encourage it in motion pictures. Once seen, with the same star in the van, the appetite is not whetted by repetition. The subject is too likely to have lost its keen edge of interest, and comparisons are encouraged which do neither production the least good.

The second "Tess," with Mary Pickford once more, seems to have rushed back upon the screen, suffering from the piratical urge of some forgotten ancestor. It rips and rages in spots which previously were treated more calmly. Perhaps the dawn of jazz infected the re-born infant.

"Little Mary" also seems to have been imbued with the "kick" of the returned prodigal. She always is cute, but now grows very ingenuish, at times dashing along with the skidding steps which, it was thought, were patented by our beloved Charley, long ago.

But Rupert Hughes, borrowed for the occasion, gave Miss Pickford a smoother adaptation than the previous development, and Charles Rosher's photography, especially of exteriors, is work of the camera artist.

Lloyd Hughes, very clean cut and attractive to the ladies, juveniles his way through the picture splendidly. Gloria Hope supplies some good emotional work, while Danny Hoy portrays an appealing boy's character, even though it is that of a weakling. Jean Hersholt is so very bad, as a character, that he proves very good as an actor. Robert Russell, Gloria's fiance, is satisfactory. David Torrence, Forrest Robertson, Gus Saville and Mme. de Bodamere balance the cast.

John S. Robertson directed the production, and was successful in providing excellent suspense in several situations.

"The $5 Baby"

AUDIENCES at Lowe's State are enjoying a pleasing Viola Dana production this week, which is based upon a very novel idea. There is much human interest in the picture, fortunately, with a certain amount of true heart interest supplied by Ralph Lewis. Outside of the star's work and popularity, it must be said that Mr. Lewis' portrayal of the familiar Hebrew of likable fatherly type does much to save a weak continuity.

Miss Dana romps delightfully through the earlier scenes, doing everything well that she is given an opportunity to do. But every woman in the audience must feel secret envy to see her run the gamut from 12 to 20 with such success. Add to this the discretion as well as the talent of Harry Beaumont, the director, and the fine photography of John Arnold, and the result is a successful program picture for the moment.

There are other very definite aids, however. A member of the famous Harron family is decidedly one of these. John Harron, Miss Dana's youthful lover, is boyish, very likeable and has that rare gift of an engaging screen personality.

Otto Hoffman, Tom McGuire, Arthur Rankin, Marjorie Maurice, E. Pasque and the notable Josephine Crowell are well cast.

If Irvin S. Cobb had not written this story, and had it not been published in the journal which seems to be a hitching post for studio editors, we might prove that it would be impossible for a frowsy tramp to pawn a well dressed babe, plainly not his own. But, as the situation has the support of a great author and a famous editor, we must be entirely mistaken as to the meaning of logic. Great is the printed word!

W. E. W.

As in "One Clear Call," Irene Rich again brings tears to our eyes by her emotional realism in "Brawn of the North"

"Brawn of the North"

THE gentleman who made himself famous by vociferously offering his kingdom for a horse, after all, only wanted a ride. Love for the equine did not enter into the plot, although we have been told that the play in which it occurred scored quite a success.

But the after generations who presumed to make drama of dumb animals, usually turned to the canine, with much success also. There was a reason. There is something of understanding and sympathy between the right kind of a human and Towser, which is akin to the human tie. We are quite sorry for the person who does not kindle at the waggle of a pup's tail or the depth of friendliness in a dog's eyes.

Therefore you will like "Brawn of the North," because Strongheart again is the lead, although he does his leading upon four feet. Once more, as in "The Silent Call," this splendid specimen of doghood reveals his superb intelligence amid conflict and dire dangers, in a region of snows which would delight the eye of a homesick Esquimaux.

There have been snow backgrounds galore upon the screen, but it is doubtful if greater expanses of white territory, more striking mountain ranges and their ruggedness were ever photographed so effectively as in this strikingly scenic production.

The unusual was presented with an actual pack of wolves, who worked as if "taking direction." The working unit of the organization must have secrets regarding the handling of wild game which have been unknown up to this period.

The most appealing episode was the rescue of a babe from the wolf pack by the great Strongheart who battled back the pack and escaped with the wrapped babe, carrying the bundle in his mouth over great expanses, to safety.

Irene Rich, the heroine of the tale, is a thorough actress, but was called upon to portray scenes very trying to the most talented. That she carried on with complete success cannot be denied, especially in the tense scene where she believed her babe had been destroyed by the wolf pack.

Other members of the cast, although with much less to do, were entirely adequate. The camerawork was a credit to any production.

"The New Teacher"

DOUBTLESS on the printed page "Little Aliens" proved interesting to many readers in its delightful situations of words, clever dialog and its picture of misery in the tenements. But, stripped of verisage and transplanted to the screen in a very flat manner, the story, in guise of "The New Teacher," carries not one situation which is younger than the emancipation proclamation.

Shirley Mason, Alan Forest, Earl Metcalf, clever little Pat Moore and the talented little girl, Helen Stone, aided by a flying machine and Frank Good's photography, do what they can to help out a lost cause, but only succeed in spots in this Fox production. The fact that it is surrounded by very good vaudeville at the Hillstreet helps some.

"Fools of Fortune"

THE crying need for advanced adapters, who possess constructive genius in building up the story of others for screen presentation, is most pronouncedly illustrated in "Fools of Fortune."

The original story, "Assisting Ananias," easily should have served as an excellent vehicle for a film production but, as presented, it drags. Just why company and especially director should have accepted such a lean effort in place of the necessarily fattened continuity, is difficult to understand. Still the film is an interesting one.

There is no neglect in cast. Margaret De La Motte is more than pleasing in the feminine lead, and Jack Dill is the boy, playing the diverse situations with skill. Tully Marshall, Russell Simpson, Frank Brownlee and Lillian Langdon, names to juggle with, are all in the cast. Louis W. Chaudet directed.

Pickups By The Staff

Chaplin Is "Patron"

Charles Chaplin purchased the first patron's ticket to the first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, officials announce.

There are 4950 patrons' tickets available to motion picture folk. Patrons' tickets are the only ones that will admit to the all-night premiere festivities that will mark the opening of the exposition next June.

Three studios report their personnel 100 per cent patrons.

If members of the profession fail to take the entire number of patrons' tickets, the remainder will be placed on sale to the public.

Jack Jevne, whose connection with scenario writing dates back to the short pants days of the industry and the old Biograph studio in New York, talked to the scenario class of the Long Beach Evening High school last Thursday night. He stressed the need for would-be phonoplaywrights to maintain a teachable attitude. Leslie Bates conducts the class. Jevne is a critic with Palmer Photoplay school.

Marie Halvey has returned to the Studio club after a year in Chicago.

Ethel Clayton, Alla Nazimova, Clara Bond, Mrs. Charles Ray, Carrie Jacobs Bond, Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa and Beulah Marie Dix have renewed memberships in the Hollywood Studio club.

Mitzi Kimball is a new resident of the Studio club. She was formerly of the Three Arts club.

Barbara La Marr was signed by B. P. Schulberg to play the role of the working man's wife in "Poor Men's Wives," the latest Al Lichtman attraction. Frank Dazey and his wife, Agnes Johnston, were the co-authors of the original story. They have also written the scenario for the picture, on which Gasnier will begin camera work within a few days.

Walter Emerson plans to make a flying trip to Montana from Hollywood as soon as his picture work will permit. His purpose is to formally lay claim to his share of a 200,000-acre ranch willed to him by his late father.

Leon Bary is back in Hollywood after six weeks' stay in Hawaii, where he played the villain opposite Betty Compson in "The White Flower." He left Miss Compson and the others of her supporting cast at Hilo, doing some volcano scenes.

Jack Donovan gave a luncheon to the veterans of the World War from Sawtelle at his home on Armistice day after the parade. Over twenty ex-soldiers enjoyed his hospitality.

David Torrence, who plays Elias Graves in "Tess of the Storm Country," has been offered a contract to star in a series of Scotch comedy dramas to be made in Scotland by a concern said to number among its owners Sir Harry Lauder. Mr. Torrence was born in Scotland.

PARAMOUNT CONVENTION HERE

The East will shake hands with the West at the big convention of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation to be held in Los Angeles the entire coming week. A special train bearing chief executives of the organization and distributing representatives from every American point on the movie compass, is nearing the city.

The host will arrive Monday afternoon, headed by Adolph Zukor, president; Jesse L. Lasky, vice president and S. R. Kent, general manager of department of distribution.

A big banquet of guests and stars will be held at the Lasky studio Tuesday evening. A feature of the week will be a downtown street parade which will include famous stars and leading picture players. Friday night the delegates will be tendered a banquet at the Ambassador, headquarters of the convention.

The object of the Pacific Coast convention is to bring the distributing and producing ends of the industry into closer co-ordination. Daily business sessions will be devoted to discussing this and other vital problems.

REMODEL FEDERAL STUDIOS

An appropriation of $2,000,000 has been made by officers of the Federal studios for the construction of stage, administration and technical building. Two stage and administration buildings have already been completed of the Spanish Castilian type. A new stage building now under construction is to be of Italian architecture.

A FORTUNE SCRAPPED?

No confirmation has been received regarding the reported scrapping of the Fatty Arbuckle comedies held on the shelves of the Paramount, in New York. Officials of the Lasky studio here have received no word of the alleged bonfire.

However, if it be true that the three expensive productions, as yet unreleased, are to be destroyed, it will mean that Arbuckle's drinking escapade at the St. Francis, San Francisco, which wrought up the country to high pitch because of Virginia Rappe's death, has cost the corporation profits in the neighborhood of $5,000,000.

CORRINE GRIFFITH QUILTS

Corrine Griffith has cancelled her contract with Vitaphone. The star says that the separation was mutual. Her agreement did not expire until March. It is probable that she will be seen in all-star casts in the near future.

The babe who "came in an auto," is to be adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Cecil DeMille. Some time ago Neil McCarthy returned to his auto, parked in the street, and discovered that some mother had hidden a little babe therein. The child was taken to the Castelar Creche, where friendless babes find homes. While at a board meeting, Mrs. DeMille saw the babe and was attracted. The little unknown will be raised amid luxury at the Laughlin Park home in consequence.

Twinkle, Twinkle!

The wicked bright lights of New York are winking at Frank E. Woods, renegade from system pictures, who bolted from the Lasky lot a few days since to join his co-conspirators in the East.

Before his getaway, a large number of fellow sufferers in the game of put 'em in and take your chances, lured Frank and Mrs. Woods to the low, rakish Writers clubhouse, and assailed the two with a turkey dinner and many crowns of honor.

After Woods, in conjunction with his partners in pictures, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris, arranges a market for their independent productions, the entire Woods family will hasten back to Los Angeles and their townsite, where Woods will get busy on studio and organization plans.

"Pictures are still in their infancy," declared "Spec" Woods, during a newspaper interview in New York.

Charles Sarver, former city editor of four New York newspapers, the World, Globe, Evening Mail and Press, and for several years prominently identified with motion picture production, has joined the staff of instructors of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

A scenario thief was caught in the act by Edward Montagne this week.

For some time scripts had been disappearing from his desk. One day he came in earlier than usual and heard a noise in his desk. Out jumped a rat with a scenario in his mouth.

When Mr. Scenario Thief returns he will find a piece of cheese on a funny little platform instead of the manuscripts.

Victor Heerman, Selznick director, is directing two productions at one time. While he is shooting the final scenes in "One Dollar Down," he is at the same time doing preparatory work for the filming of "Rupert of Hentzau," actual camera work of which is to start within a few days.

Milford W. Howard, head of the M. W. Howard productions, has decided to wait until spring to produce his "Peggy Ware." At that time he will take a company to Birmingham and Chattanooga for special scenes in connection with this southern story.

Children of the San Gabriel Mission were the guests of Julius and Abe Stern, Century Comedy officials. "Peg O' the Movies" was shown to them.

Ruth Stonehouse's house in Hollywood was broken into by burglars who stole a pair of old-fashioned earrings, gold and black enamel; two bracelets of the same material and other articles, which, presents from the star's parents, are valued highly because of the sentiment attached thereto. Miss Stonehouse, who at present is appearing over the Junior Orpheum circuit, was traveling at the time.

Shannon Day and Theodore Roberts were guests of honor at a banquet given by the Hollywood Business Men's Club last Tuesday.

Revolt of the Freelances

ONE of the contributors to the recent writers' edition of Camera! seems to have started something with the suggestion that there is need of a freelance league. Numerous spontaneous outbursts in various parts of the country have been noted in communications received since by this publication.

One of the most vigorous covers the wails and complaints of the majority. It is from Will C. Beale, for years a prized contributor to the best magazines of the country. We also are personally aware that Mr. Beale has written some very original photoplays, of splendid plot and strength, having handled two of his screen stories through production.

Therefore Mr. Beale's added word will prove interesting to many thousands of writers who have paid heavily for the services of those postmen who weave their way to and from the various studios. Listen to him:

"Editor Camera!—I'm strong for the freelance league, suggested in a recent edition of your publication.

"As to my own position, this is it: I have had short stories mentioned in 'best short stories of the year' three consecutive years; I have written and sold (a couple of years ago) stories for the screen; I have studied the movies as a fan for years, and as a writer for the last four years.

"I have on hand five scripts written for the screen on various themes. I could quote an average of ten letters on each from prominent studios, editors or directors, making enthusiastic comment upon at least three of them, and one never has failed to bring splendid mention from everyone who has seen it. And it has been going the rounds for almost two years.

"I am waiving the matter of my stuff being good or not—it may be pretty rotten—but I actually have all those letters.

"I also have all those scripts!

"Now, what is the answer? There seems to be only one.

"If writers of some experience cannot sell their stuff what possible show has the tens of thousands of others? Still I believe that there are quantities of honest ideas in their stuff, whether well expressed or not. I am in no position to accuse staff readers, but I do know that it simply isn't in the power of man to grind out big, original ideas week after week; nor is it in the power of man to read stuff constantly and not absorb many of these big ideas.

"Whether the intent is dishonorable or not, the result is the same, and the author of these ideas is never heard from.

"How, is the screen ever going to develop its own literature as was tackled so bravely two years ago, with every attempt crowded out? It occurs to me, after sitting through pictures the last year or so, that there is a sore need of it at present.

"I am not a sorcerer. I'm simply devoting my m. p. time to work of more promise to me. But I'd like my name listed for further particulars.

WILL C. BEALE."

The only trouble with the general situation seems to be that studio managements agree with the above writer, that "the screen should develop its own literature," but are doing nothing about it.

It Makes a Difference

THE fact that great entertainment value should guarantee the success of a story in film, does not mean just what some of our anxious correspondents seem to have visualized.

The Manhattan writer, commenting upon a former article, is one of these. We did mention a high percentage mark as a standard, but did not state that any entertainment value, even as high as 90 percent, was the complete formula.

Indeed, the only entertainment value should come from far afield, sought in unfrequented places, and drift down through strange channels, to make good in the picture of today.

Numerous examples might be indicated as appearing on the screen recently. While none carries a heavy plot or has little excuse for being written, save to amuse, most of them are so replete with happy situations, interesting episodes or absurd entanglements as to prove quite ideal for theater purposes.

We might go so far as to cite one production based upon a story which carries in its very foundation, something which the conductor of this department has yowled about for many years—the lack of logic.

The story of Irvin Cobb's "The $5 Baby." A destitute mother leaves her babe on the steps of an institute together with a note to the effect that anyone caring for the babe until it is 18 years of age, may inquire as to the reward, at the end of that period, at a certain trust company.

A tramp finds the babe and note. He conceives a clever idea. He pawns the babe for $5 and, although he ranges the world far and wide for the 18 years, faithfully pays his interest upon the loan by sending 10 cents to the pawnbroker every month.

Now there is an odd foundation in its very inception, and a something which follows the unfoldment of the story like a cloudy pillar from start to finish.

However, it must be confessed that, should the original screen writer send a typewritten manuscript to the studio, based upon such an utterly impossible occurrence, it would be rejected immediately because of its lack of logic.

We can see the police rushing to the pawnshop to arrest and thrust into jail the tramp who, in all evidence, is not the father of the child. If he were, he would get a longer sentence.

On the other hand, should any pawnbroker suffer such a brain storm that he would loan money and keep the babe, the prison cell would yawn for him also.

However, "The $5 Baby" is a splendid illustration of the odd twist and the unusual in plot foundation. It runs true to form later by leaning heavily upon heart interest, but such a tale as this even, easily can run the gamut of farce and prove very popular.

The Waste Basket

Students of the photoplay should try the interesting experiment of pursuing present day fiction. You will hug up the tales with delight, perhaps, smile over whimsical situations and laugh because of the very good humor therein. When you are all done, lean back, strip the stories to the skeleton and lay down, in cold thought, the remains. Look them over and discover, in almost nine out of every ten cases, how ancient the plot has been after all. And many of these aged tales appear upon the screen merely because they have been in print. Try some of these same plots in an original photoplay, if you have the time to waste.

Again we are asked regarding the protection of scenario plots and situations. Personally we favor registration with manuscripts in a sealed envelope. Publication lays both plot and situation open to all eyes, unscrupulous as well as the honest.

The "eminent author" period passed and all is calm again. The born or well-trained fiction writers who made a study of the picture play and its construction, and who hammered away at the game faithfully, are just where they were before the far-famed rushed in. The original writers still are writing them. Many of the eminents have returned to familiar fields, some a little grouchy.

The star system still lingers, despite predictions. But the fact that certain independent productions based upon the excellence of the whole, have been sweeping the boards and piling up the cash, is something which brings great cheer to writers as well as progressive producers.

That great gamble, the public mind, is due to make another sharp turn soon, if the tide-table of past film periods means anything. Just now the costume play from the time of Noah; sheik pictures in rapid succession, sea and savages are all in favor. The outpouring is increasing. But, if the rule still operates, there will be a sudden switch and producers will do the merry-go-round all over again, chasing the will-o'-the-wisp of public fancy. If the writers are sufficiently gifted to note the first change of public sentiment, they should be able to jump into line with some effect.

Letters Home—No. 8

Griffith Park, Bigbear, Nov. 16, 1922.
Dear Sulphuria:

I said I would rite you when I sold my first skenario and I allers keep my word. Jest now I want to borrow a little boardin money until I put over my big scheme.

Them studelum fellers aint the only one that has got a attic library. My unkle, who made his mony by not goin in pitchers and still has it, lives here and has one of them things. So I have dug up a few myself to sell the studelums sech as "Quene of the Opium Den," "The World Against Her," "The Lites of London, or, Who Got Away With the Liver," and severl about the sidewalk of Noo York and such.

Noah has got nothin on me when it comes to this kinda attic library competishun, so send me the $7 quik so I can eat wile waitin for the checks. CRANKSHAFT JOE.

Pulse of the Studios

For Week Starting Monday, November 20

Professionals are requested to report to Camera! by phone or letter experiences with any company or studio that professes to teach acting, that is operated by non-professional persons, or that does not utilize players in its productions. Camera! intends to keep the Pulse of the Studios accurate in every detail. You can help by reporting any error to Pulse Editor, 595-179.

Do Studio Doors Ever Open?

Russian Actor Asks Question

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 8.—Editor Camera!—Permit me to express my sincere gladness for your good intention and wishing to abolish of these mud nests of such shameful and dishonest teachers of make-up, teachers of movie acting, etc., and of all those "casting directors" who says to every naive dreamer for diploma of movie actor or actress:

"Well, your face is just exactly what I wanted, you're nice looking, your eyes are dark, your hair brown and your nose is correct, in Greek style. All is right . . . but . . . but . . . you need a short course of acting and make-up, because all studios want trained men, you know that. That will cost to you just only $15, no more. Two weeks of training and I can place you in the studio."

"Of course, you will pay some commissions while you're acting, but I will not be very expensive to you, couple dollars, that's all. Give me now some deposit and we'll start right now, tonight."

Empties His Pocket

Those words were told me by one from "casting directors" in Grosse building.

Don't think that I was so naive and without any meditations. I turned inside out my pockets and said to him: "Oh, my savior, my deliberator from my troubles, take my money. Take all, all, what I have. Just make me an artist, a brightest star in order to darken of all actors—Tom Mix, D. Fairbanks, Walthall, R. Valentino."

For my regrets, I had in that time in my pockets only 50 cents and I could help him nothing. But I told him:

"Listen, mister, let's put your hand on your heart and tell me sincerely, openly and honestly."

"Can you put in my existence some good sense, some good feeling, if I lack them?"

"Are you able to make from me an artist, an actor, as you make a glove, a sack?"

"It seems to me you absolutely can't do it. In order to be a good actor, in order to be able to give to the spectator real sense of gladness, happiness, sorrows, fears, fortunes and sufferings, it is need first of all for actor while he acting that he should be himself deeply sentimental, sensible. He must survive in his soul all those senses, which ones he want express for spectators."

Actors Must Be Born

"Think, what kind of actor is it, who wants to show me his sorrows, his tears, but I see that he is smiling instead. He moves his shoulders, his arms, his head when it is absolutely not necessary. Really actor must be born for actor, he must be first of all an artist in his soul, in his heart. This ability, this talent impossible to buy for $15 or $25, like a gown for sweetheart."

My future "teacher" was very, very displeased and we left each other. I going by my own way and he continued to catch simple-minded "future actors and actresses."

But it seems to me that he must pretty soon to close his "business shop of actor making." Then will be no more temptations for "actors" and nice looking "actresses."

Wanted to Start Small

When I came here in Los Angeles I was very anxious to join in the studio. But I wanted to reach of it by more honest way, for I know well what means "actor" and really actor.

I didn't want some leading roles. I wanted to start from smallest parts and step by step to reach for what is called a actor.

I am Russian, Christian. In Russia I was graduated from college and military academy. I feel that I could be useful in the studio, being well educated and sensible. But if it is impossible, I can't help for myself without any help from others. Everywhere I've addressed myself in my claims I've met a light smile and short: "I can't help you, I am very sorry."

Maybe it was because I didn't refuse myself that I am Russian. I always told who am I and I asked for help.

Welcome the Sincere

It seems to me that for those who want to work sincerely, honestly in his proper way, to him the door must be wide opened.

When, in Russia, we meet a stranger wishing to work, we give him a possibility to develop himself. We didn't look on him like a stranger, we count him as a friend, and we help him.

Of course present conditions in Russia, all this bolshevism, communism and all kind of socialism are main thing that all people fear us, thinking about us that we are some murderer, robber or like that.

But between a "bolshevist" and "intelligent" is big difference and all Russia people cannot be called robber.

Of course, I thought, as bold Mr. Ford in his "My Life and Work," Russia left without brains, without any commonsense. Now in Russia are just short-minded fanatics, who don't know what to do.

But I believe that the time will come and this two sisters, America and Russia, will stretch their hands to each other in the mutual work for happiness and gladness for both.

CALLS FOR CHEER

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 8.—Editor Camera!—Fred Turner, the well known character actor—his last big part, "The Jack Knife Man"—is desperately ill in a private sanatorium at 2471 Beechwood drive. He is laying there alone and certainly his friends would come to bring him cheer, which he so much needs, if they knew of his illness. The profession will appreciate your courtesy if you will publish these facts in your next issue.

DEFENDS ONE SCHOOL

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 5.—Editor Camera!—May I sound a warning note and make an appeal to your occasional correspondents who from time to time voice their protest against those parasites of the motion picture industry—the "schools?" Those of us who hope to reach as far into the future as we have come in the past, who have been integral parts of the production end of the industry—even in modest and humble positions—are watching jealously the larger and basic issues that just now are making motion picture history.

Too easily, too flippantly we attack and undermine. I liked that letter of recent date, where a student of a make-up school came right out before the crowd and stood up for the "course" she had taken. But to get back to principles and main issues:

Isn't it, after all, dangerous and even self-destructive for us within the industry to attack each other? I refer to unwarranted or groundless attacks, made without investigation; to broad, sweeping allegations, and the protest that is all-embracing. We one and all stand solidly back of the splendid campaign that Camera! is waging against the fake schools. But even here let us be discriminating in our loud "amens." Let's be definite—and sparing. Let's not broadcast our slurs to an all-too-eager public's ears. It's a mud-slinging, mud-eating public that we are dealing with. Let's simply stop feeding them mud, that's all.

I for one have for years stood up loyally for our industry. I go out of my way to nail scandal and false rumors and muck tales. Half a dozen or more of our stars I defend on every possible occasion—give them a clean bill of health, because my home has been in Los Angeles and Hollywood the past 11 years, and I know what I am talking about—I know these stars and just what kind of lives they lead. This energetic defense has never brought me anything personally, but my reward has been the knowledge that I am true to the banner that I march under.

Suppose, for one solid year, every man and woman identified with the motion picture industry were to bridle his and her tongue and refuse to promulgate gossip of any sort derogatory to any individual within that industry. Why, we would be practically unassailable. The cleverest reporters and muck writers couldn't glean one paragraph of scandal to mull over and publish. We would be a solid phalanx of loyalty and stand-togetherness. In the name of the cause that means our bread and butter, let us uphold the hands that write our pay checks. Put it on the plane of selfishness, if no other and worthier appeal is available. But it's a fine, splendid thing to see someone whirl on a group of scandal mongers and declare: "That's a lie! I know her, and she's absolutely pure!"

As to our invectives against the parasite schools—cannot we afford to be cautious and discriminating? All the utterances that I have read or heard breathe the poisonous implication that all schools are fraudulent.

Unfortunately the word "school," in cinema connection, has fallen into disrepute. This is not fair. Some aspects of the cinema art can and must be taught. Curriculum spells the only recourse. The in-breeding policies of some of the studios must inevitably result in vitiation—sooner or later. Schools supply the only answer; particularly in the photoplay realm. This writer has benefited so incredibly by one of these courses that in sheer justice one voice at least is going to be raised in defense of one of the so-called "schools" that has suffered opprobrium.

Cinema history will, less than a decade hence, tell us that one man in the industry has exerted a wider and more lasting influence for good than any dozen directors of the present whose productions now are winning fame and fortune—for the few. And history will name that man Frederic Palmer. Scores of unthinking persons within our industry have in my hearing cast slurs at the Palmer Plan "school." But not one of these reputation-wreckers has ever taken the Palmer course. I have. And I am amazed at what it can teach even one who has had to do with productions for some years.

Let us be less embracing and inclusive in our denunciation of the moving picture "schools," knowing that one at least may be worthy of the industry's heartiest support. Let's not tear down our own walls or punch holes in our own dykes, lest we find that the finger that should stop the leak is busy pointing at our weaknesses.

(From Camera! of Nov. 17, 1922)

PRODUCTION BEGINS ON ENORMOUS SCALE

Metro is to open November 25. Dorothy Gish will start in about two weeks. Bill Hart started the day the Allies started peace. All studios to be open before the first of month. Tod Browning started last week with Priscilla Dean. Christie studio starts Monday with Jimmy Clemens casting. Bessie Love began this week on "The Enchanted Barn." Fanny Ward has moved to the Dian-do studio in Glendale. Douglas Fairbanks resumed his "Arizona" picture this week. Maude George and Arthur Forde were married October 16 and left for Catalina. Earle Williams is working on "The American Ace," under James Young at Vitagraph. Tom Moore finished his first picture at Triangle and expects to start the second this week. Gladys Brockwell and her company left Thursday for Big Bear valley for "The Framers."

George Creel will be out of a job in a week or two. Anybody looking for a press agent?

T. N. Heffron started with William Desmond at the Hampden (Willis and Inglis) studio Thursday.

Clarence Badger will start this week with Mabel Normand on her first western made Goldwyn.

Wilfred Lucas and Bess Meredith completed their picture at National featuring Cleo Madison.

Katherine and Jane Lee begin at Fox in "Smiles" under Arvid Gills-trom's direction this week.

Mary MacLaren starts Monday at Universal under direction of Ida May Park in "Whose Widow?"

Bill Duncan and his troupe resumed work on his Vitagraph serial with a new wardrobe for every member of the cast.

Doris Lee has signed again with Ince. Peggy Prevost is taking a secretarial course. Hugh Saxon with Fred Niblo at Ince.

Richard Barthelmess met his mother at the train last week. The Barthelmess family is now comfortably located in Hollywood.

Lillian Walker started her first production at Brunton Tuesday. It is "Friar," directed by William P. S. Earle. L. P. Shumway is lead.

Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, who has been ill in a Los Angeles hospital the past week, expects to move into her new home in Laughlin park next week.

Casting starts at National next week. Henry Walthall starts December 1 under direction of Louis Chaudet. Bert Bracken will direct Billie Rhodes in "In Search of Arcady."

Mary Pickford expects to start her First National picture, "Daddy Long Legs," November 25. Marshall Neilan will direct. Agnes Johnson came from New York to write continuity.

Although the White Rats opposed granting a charter to the Motion Picture Players' union, dispatches state it was granted at the national labor convention at Laredo, Texas. Credit is given Seymour Hastings.

Selig studio, idle many months, is prepared for six companies. Oscar Apfel arrives tonight to begin a picture dealing with Armenia. Pekin Film company is casting; Clyde McCoy will direct the first comedy.

"Scoop" Conlon has resigned as drama editor of the Los Angeles Times to become the new publicity purveyor at Hart studio, succeeding Gerald Duffy. Charles Geigerich is the publicity man for Vitagraph.

Louis Weber has severed with Carl Laemmle and signed with Louis B. Mayer. Weber-Stewart productions will be written by Phillip Smalley. Anita Stewart will arrive the 22nd and will start at once on "An American Girl."

It is estimated that $30,000,000 is invested in war pictures. What will happen now that peace is declared? Camera! believes pictures without too much German atrocity in them will go good for six months. The real war picture is not yet made.

Cecil B. DeMille is working at Lasky's. Shirley Mason will start under Robert Vignola's direction. Bryant Washburn will complete his picture with Donald Crisp. At the Morocco Constance Talmadge is in the middle of a picture with Walter Edwards.

AMERICANISM WINS

It is evident that the holier-than-thou individual has overdone it, and that the absurdity of censorship, an inquisition instead of regulation, has become impressed upon the people of the country. Many evidences are at hand, but the defeat of the censorship bill in Massachusetts is the most recent and conclusive.

Now if the new chief executive of New York will carry out his threat to kick out the self-appointed regulators of other people's private business, we can see the spread of the tidal wave until motion pictures are as fully protected under the constitution as any other legitimate business. Americanism may be hampered at times, but it prevails in the end.

Following the announcement that Larry Semon is to build his own studio and make his own comedies, comes an excited story from the genial p. a., now universally known as director general of publicity, to the effect that Larry is searching for a new leading lady. She must have dark hair but a bright future; a Venus-like form but very durable. Anyone who can fill this job and double for a football in a college game, should hasten to apply.

"In the successful production of period furniture the designer has a keen appreciation of the spirit of the time as well as an understanding of the motifs employed. Nicety of judgment is required to so perfectly interpret the spirit of the XVII century craftsmen."

Eugene O'Brien has left the screen and consented to appear in "Steve," a new play by Robt. L. Dempster.

Alan Crosland and his "Enemies of Women" company, is back after six weeks in Nice, Monte Carlo and Deauville, and is completing the picture at the International studio. Lionel Barrymore, Alma Rubens, Gareth Hughes, Gladys Hulette, Buster Collier are in the company.

Harry Fraiser, former eastern Universal director, will lay aside his megaphone for a while to play a comedy lawyer in the next C. C. Burr special featuring Johnny Hines.

Faire Binney, sister of Constance, was married recently at the home of the mother, Mrs. H. Willard Grey, to David Carleton Sloane of Philadelphia, son of Lieutenant Commander John D. Sloane, U. S. N., retired.

Raymond McKee, now under C. C. Burr's management, is also going on the legitimate stage in New York. Under a special arrangement with Burr, Ray will appear in a new play called "Listening In," a comedy-drama. At the same time he will work in screen comedies.

The W. F. Cody Historical Picture company, in which Johnny Baker, veteran plainsman and foster son of the late Buffalo Bill, is interested, has asked the courts to enjoin the Colonial Amusement company from using the name of Buffalo Bill or the likeness of him advertising a motion picture released by the Universal Film exchange.

J. Stuart Blackton, who retired to London to film foreign celebrities, is out to make another production with Carpentier, the scrapper. The French boxer's first film was "A Gipsy Cavalier."

An ambitious and energetic young man of 25, inexperienced, desires position as assistant cameraman. Willing to start for small salary. Charles McNavin, Grand Pacific Hotel, 723 South Main St., Telephone Broadway 240.

THE DIGEST OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

Published in Los Angeles by Ted Taylor

Vol. V.

Saturday, November 18, 1922

No. 32

The P. A.'s Friends

The Ottawa (Kans.) World has suspended as a daily.

The Rapid City (S. D.) Guide has changed from weekly to daily.

The Lubeck (Tex.) Avalanche became a daily the morning of November 1.

Clayton Hamilton will write a photoplay department for the Theater magazine, starting January.

Thomas F. Flaherty, re-write man on the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post, has purchased a controlling interest in a Westport, Conn., picture theater.

Richard Kyle Fox, publisher of the Police Gazette and father-in-law of Carlyle Robinson, former press agent to Charles Chaplin, died in Red Bank, N. J., November 14.

Sam W. B. Cohn, former publicity director for Associated Producers, is associated with Harry Hammond Beall, who has opened new offices at 428 Union League building.

Frank Davis and M. M. Riddell, two well known picture men, who were injured in an auto accident a few days ago, suffered bruises and cuts, but have almost fully recovered.

Robert E. Sherwood, motion picture reviewer for Life, the New York Herald and the Photodramatist, married Booth Tarkington's niece, Mary Judah Brandon, well known New York actress, October 29.

Charles E. Hughes, of the Los Angeles bureau, International News Service, has gained ten pounds since he entered a sanatorium at Prescott, Ariz., for lung treatment. He expects to be discharged within three months.

Scripps-Howard Newspapers is the new name for the former Scripps-McRae League. The new name covers the retirement of E. W. Scripps and the placing of his son, Robert P. Scripps, 27, in editorial control of 25 daily newspapers, with Roy W. Howard as his business partner.

The Scripps-Howard papers are: Birmingham (Ala.) Post, Sacramento Star, San Diego Sun, San Francisco News, Denver (Colo.) Express, Washington (D. C.) News, Evansville (Ind.) Press, Terre Haute (Ind.) Post, Des Moines (Ia.) News, Indianapolis (Ind.) Times, Covington (Ky.) Post, Akron (O.) Press, Cincinnati (O.) Post, Cleveland (O.) Press, Columbus (O.) Citizen, Toledo (O.) News-Bee, Youngstown (O.) Telegram, Oklahoma (Okla.) News, Memphis (Tenn.) Press, Knoxville (Tenn.) News, Houston (Tex.) Press, Fort Worth (Tex.) Press, El Paso (Tex.) Post, Norfolk (Va.) Post, Baltimore (Md.) Post.

They do not include: Los Angeles Record, Portland (Ore.) News, Dallas (Tex.) Dispatch, Seattle (Wash.) Star, Spokane (Wash.) Press, and Tacoma (Wash.) Times. These five were founded by E. W. Scripps, but are now operated by the widow of his elder son, James G. Scripps.

TAYLOR'S BODY IN MAUSOLEUM

On the marble panel of a crypt in the Hollywood mausoleum is a bronze tablet which reads:

IN MEMORY OF
WILLIAM C. DEANETANNER BELOVED FATHER OF
ETHEL C. DEANE-TANNER
DIED FEBRUARY 1, 1922

On either side of the tablet are flowers, freshly placed there several times a week.

The body of William D. Taylor, murdered motion picture director, was removed from the receiving vault in Hollywood cemetery soon after Decoration day and placed in the mausoleum.

When his daughter arrived in Los Angeles she visited the mausoleum, and arranged for the flowers.

AUTHORS' LEAGUE ELECTS

Thompson Buchanan was elected first honorary vice-president of the Authors' League of America at the election held at the Hotel Martinique, New York, November 2. The following are the new officers:

Ellis Parker Butler, president; Gelett Burgess, vice-president; Thompson Buchanan, Owen Davis, C. E. Falls, Victor Herbert, William Johnston and Mrs. Alice Duer Miller, honorary vice-presidents, and Eric Schuler, secretary-treasurer.

Overheard

Sid Smith is doing only one more picture for Harry Cohen. Then by mutual agreement his contract terminates. The secret still is, who will take his place?

The popularity of Georges Carpentier is again in the ascendant after his defeat at the hands of the negro boxer, Siki. The press agent for J. Stuart Blackton, who plans another film starring Carpentier, states that outbursts against the French boxer were engineered by his opponents. Sympathy that went temporarily to Siki has returned to Carpentier. It seems that the hostility toward Carpentier was due to the feeling that he was too puffed up by success, and that his posing as a marquis in the films was a little too pretentious for a boxer, even a world's champion. This refers to his part in the recently produced "A Gypsy Cavalier." Now the Paris public realizes that all boxing champions get puffed with pride. Now it is said Siki is giving an impression not liked in some quarters.

And it is believed that Georges is working seriously to recover his position.

THE LITTLE BIRD

Exhausts

From Al Martin

Breezy Eason shot one scene twenty times with Laura LaPlante hanging over a fire. What you trying to do Breezy, roast chicken?

Monte Banks' next picture is "Four O'clock in the Morning."

Rupert Hughes announces "Souls for Sale." Do you handle rubber heels too, Mr. Hughes?

Albert Rogell, to get dope on his picture on dope, spent two days in jail, he says. Stick to your story, Al.

Noah Beery has upset the entire calendar system. Am writing a story for him entitled, "A Hundred Weeks a Year."

"Civilization Failed" was written by a man who spent two days in Pomona.

Agnes Parsons' story, "Vengeance of the Deep," is not a sequence to "Twenty Thousand Legs Under the Sea."

If at first you can't succeed wear a monocle.

Alice Lake and Edwin J. Brady are supporting Owen Moore, the working title being "A Dollar Down." Why not call it, "A Sheriff a Week"?

Herbert Rawlinson told me that Jack Conway is the best director in the business, and Jack in return praises Herb. Sort of a compliment club, eh what?

To kill time the boys at the Christie hotel have a pocket book on the street with a string attached. It's an old gag. Amid their laughs I tried to pick it up.

Motion Pictures Will Produce Art Only by Becoming Creative

Art is essentially creative.

Masterpieces of painting, sculpture, music, and drama have all been original in their interpretations of life.

And they have been the work of creators who were thoroughly conversant with the potentialities and limitations of their chosen medium of expression.

Think of the loss to the world had Michelangelo, Rubens, de Vinci or other Masters wasted their gifted brushes and creative genius by revising on canvas the work of great sculptors!

Shakespeare's immortal plays would never have been written had he bent his talent to adapting great fiction to the service of the stage.

Yet What of the Photoplay?

Are there to be masterpieces of photodrama? Is this universal medium for the interpretation of life to rise to the heights attained by the Arts?

It has such possibilities, although its progress toward this highest goal seems slow at times.

May not the reason be that eighty per cent of all the motion pictures being produced today are revised short stories, novels or stage plays?

This material often makes good pictures to be sure. The work of adaptation has frequently been ably done.

But never without original stories, produced by trained creators of photodrama, will this medium win to the highest artistic standards.

There is a Source of Original Stories

During the past few years a source of original screen stories has been gradually developing under the guidance of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

This organization has not only discovered and developed photoplay writing talent, but has also become the largest single clearing house for original scenarios.

We have available every type of story for every kind of picture which is worthy of your consideration.

They are original stories written with a fresh interest furnished by new viewpoints which their authors bring to the work.

They are finer stories written solely for the screen—not material written for other mediums of expression.

They offer to producers, directors and stars new opportunities to produce pictures which have a strong, popular appeal in addition to unusual artistic worth.

Let Us Discuss This Service With You

Many of the largest producers are winning repeated successes with pictures produced from original stories provided by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

Our representatives will gladly tell you of the Palmer successes and discuss with you the merits of original stories which are now available.

These are shows that live down the centuries in the minds of men—but the crowning show in the annals of all history is yet to be staged.

It is planned for the summer of 1923 by a greater aggregation of artists, writers and master technicians than that which made Athens famous for forty centuries.

It will take the form of an exposition planned and produced by the united efforts and forces of the great motion picture industry.

It will be held in Los Angeles, capital of the film world.

The new art-industry that has reproduced for gazing millions the spectacular events of other times, plans to surpass everything that has gone before in a monster show that will last 30 days, and that will bring travelers from every land to witness its marvels.

It is the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. Read of it in the following pages.

Cinema Exposition Honors Unwritten Law of Nations

THE first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Industrial Exposition, to be held in Los Angeles in the summer of 1923, will commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the Monroe doctrine. The event, to last thirty days, will be international in scope. It is under the direction and supervision of the motion picture industry.

Coming in 1923 it is logical that the event should commemorate the centennial anniversary of the Monroe doctrine, but it is particularly appropriate that the event should be celebrated in Los Angeles and sponsored by the great motion picture industry. For Los Angeles is the center and the heart of the film industry. This city is rapidly becoming the acknowledged capitol in the United States of the Spanish-American peoples to the south of the Rio Grande, the territorial integrity of whose countries has been guaranteed and preserved by the doctrine enunciated one hundred years ago by our President, James Monroe.

Unwritten Law of Nations

And what was this doctrine which, without having legislative sanction, has long been accepted by the people of the United States as the law of the land, respected by all other powers and accepted by many—a doctrine that must for all time be the self preservation factor of the western hemisphere?

James Monroe was the real pioneer of the West. It was he who planted the flag west of the Mississippi and by this act assured the United States its place as the leading power of the three Americas.

When Thomas Jefferson was President, the sturdy western backwoodsmen who traded at the French port of New Orleans did not like the way they were treated. They served notice in Washington that the mouth of the Mississippi ought to belong to the United States. They threatened to go down there and take the place.

To forestall any such trouble, which undoubtedly would have led to war with France, President Jefferson sent James Monroe, a young Virginian of ability, as special envoy to Napoleon to negotiate for the purchase of the mouth of the great river.

Napoleon Listens

At this time R. R. Livingston was the United States minister to France. Monroe, ably assisted by Livingston, succeeded in purchasing for a ridiculously small sum not only the Mississippi delta but the vast tract of country extending north and west to the Rocky mountains, recorded in United States history as the Louisiana Purchase.

Monroe's arrival in Paris was opportune, for Napoleon was about to go to war with Great Britain again. Having insufficient sea power to protect French possessions in America, he was not unwilling to listen to the proposals of President Jefferson as urged by Monroe. The Louisiana Purchase treaty resulted, and was signed April 30, 1803.

Then came the destruction of the French and Spanish fleets at Trafalgar. Britannia ruled the seas until 1812, when the United States disputed her claims to supremacy and so commanded the respect of the British that Canning, foreign secretary, proposed to Richard Rush, American minister in London,

ONCE upon a time, I announced to the world that a great American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Industrial Exposition was in the making, and a fellow said: "Is that some new specie of breakfast food? If so, show me." And I said I would, so here goes: "Revue" is French, but you can't eat it. A fellow is apt to feast upon it, however, when applied to fashion shows with living models. But this won't be as fashionable as it will be educational and entertaining, because it will be history with a motion picture punch and commercialism illuminated. You see, this event is what one might call a double header—a revue first and then an exposition, which President McKinley said was "A spur to greater achievement." However, the revue promises to become so big that it will be like the tail that wagged the dog—if you read the whole story you'll be shown all right. (Turn over to page 7.)

that Great Britain and the United States stand together in opposition to the Holy Alliance recently formed to aid Spain in an attempt to reconquer her lost American possessions and discourage the spread of democracy.

Spain had lost every colony in the New World and this, together with the revolutionary overturning of royalty in France, had greatly alarmed the powers of Europe.

Jefferson Approves

Canning's proposals, backed by assurances that Great Britain stood ready to go to war to assist America in resisting this threatened interference in American affairs, were submitted by Monroe, then President, to his old friend and teacher, Thomas Jefferson.

Jefferson replied that the matter was the most important that had come to his notice since the Declaration of Independence. He advised President Monroe to accept the proffered aid of England.

On December 2, 1823, President Monroe in a message to Congress promulgated the now celebrated doctrine in these words:

Monroe Speaks

THE occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers. . . . In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part nor does it comport with our policy to do so. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced, that we resent injuries or make preparation for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. . . . We owe it therefore to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States. In the war between those new governments and Spain we declared our neutrality at the time of their recognition, and to this we have adhered and shall continue to adhere, provided no change shall occur which, in the judgment of the competent authorities of this government, shall make a corresponding change on the part of the United States indispensable to their security. . . . It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness; nor can anyone believe

An Achievement

Last May we extended an invitation to everyone connected with the motion picture industry to trade with us and save money on the purchase of home furnishings.

The response has exceeded our greatest expectations and is reflected in our ability to serve you today even more efficiently and to sell furniture that is both artistic and practical at substantial savings even greater than those we offered upon our advent.

With past achievements to guide us on we shall continue to render exceptional service, and shall do our utmost to keep this the Mecca of discriminating buyers, and, as such, deserving of your patronage.

that our southern brethren, if left to themselves, would adopt 'it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition in any form, with indifference."

Lincoln Upholds It

The Holy alliance was stopped, and Europe ever since has had a wholesome respect for America and her great doctrine.

During Lincoln's administration, taking advantage of the war between the states, Napoleon III of France attempted to erect a monarchy in Mexico. Lincoln re-enunciated the Monroe doctrine and mobilized an army at the Rio Grande, giving notice to France that Mexico should determine for herself what form of government she should have.

Again during Cleveland's administration the doctrine was re-enunciated when Great Britain interfered in the Venezuela boundary matter; again the doctrine was triumphant and its principle was readily accepted by Great Britain, the only government in the world that possessed the power to oppose it.

Thus has a great principle, without legislative action of any kind, actually become the law of a great nation, recognized and accepted by the world—a proof that legislation is not alone essential to inspire a people to the recognition of truth, justice and equity.

First Self Determinist

James Monroe was therefore the apostle of self determination a century before the phrase itself was first coined by those who do not nearly so well understand its true meaning. It is but a just tribute to his memory that the nations of the western hemisphere should, at the call of the cinema, assemble in the true city of the Angels to do him honor in the year of the centennial of the enunciation of his immortal doctrine.

Expositions are not only "time keepers of progress," as President McKinley has told us, but they are clearing houses for ideas and "get acquainted" parties for the nations. So may it not easily come about that the spirit of James Monroe, re-awakened by the cinema, shall at this exposition establish deeper and more enduring friendships between our country and our good neighbors to the south, thereby making Los Angeles in spirit and in fact the Spanish-American capitol of the western hemisphere—the center of Spanish-American commerce, art and learning, and the playground of these two peoples whose interests are so nearly akin?

Only Patrons at Premier

The opening move for securing co-operation of the motion picture industry for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Industrial Exposition was made this week when F. B. Davison, director general of the exposition, signed the first patron certificate, which was presented to M. C. Levee by Mayor George E. Cryer.

The attractively engraved patron certificates can be purchased by any one connected with the motion picture industry. They carry ten admissions each, ten reserved seat coupons and, in addition, a ticket of admission to the premier. The exposition premier calls for the most spectacular production ever devised by motion picture people. Admission will be by "patron" ticket only.

BELIEVE me, it will be some revue. It will begin away back there when Columbus exclaimed "E Pluribus Unum!"—meanin' Europe ain't in it, or something like that—and then follow the scent down through time to Finis, meanin'—

The American dollar is the handsomest engraving in the world! This scent may lead to the Boston tea party, where tea was mixed with salt water and nobody cared for it, resultin' in some loss. And it may take us to Concord, where there wasn't any concord because of temperamental folk, actors of their day. And I guess this same party discovered cinematographers, too, or somethin' like 'em. 'T any rate, somebody did some shootin' there. Then somebody else said, "Where's George? Let George do it!" And it came to pass that George Washington was discovered, and he said, "Betsy, you build an American flag." And when she had the flag ready George waved it and said, "Lord Howe, dast you to shoot at this?" (Turn right over to page 9.)

Baby Star Speaks Piece

HURRAH! hurrah! Pop and Mom tell me the first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition—wow, I'm through saying that bookful—will soon be a real—, a real—, a reality, and gee I'm happy, for that'll give us kids a chance to see the big stars. I'm only a little one, the same as Jackie Coogan, and this won'erful first annual—well, you know the name—will bring us all together.

I'm pretty sure the affair will be a grand thing. I can't hardly wait, and I betcha no one else can. Gee, ain't this industry up to the finest tricks! Always doing something that no other industry would even think of trying. I'll betcha we're all proud of it—ain't we?

I think that Camera!'s special issue will help a whole lot. It ought to, for it will be read by everyone. The opening night is what I can't wait for. Pop told me that they're gon'er serve breakfast. Gee, I hope they serve soft eggs and toast—'n ice cream. Um, um!

Well, I'll see you all at the first annual,—you know what I mean. Bye, bye, folksies.

BABY PEGGY.

LOEW INSPECTS METRO

Marcus Loew, president of Metro Pictures corporation, is in Los Angeles, conferring with studio officials regarding production plans. The fate for 1923 of Metro's contract stars, and assignments of stars and directors to stories for the coming season, will probably be settled by the time this is printed.

Charles M. Schwab, famous steel magnate, has been elected to the board of directors of Loew's, Inc., Marcus Loew revealed on his arrival.

F. P. L. HANDLES METRO FILM

The distributing amalgamation of Metro with Paramount is now an established fact—in Brazil. The entire Metro output will be handled in that South American country by the F. P.-L. foreign exchange at Brazil.

Grauman In Chain

Grauman's impressive Egyptian theater in Hollywood is now a member of West Coast Theaters, Inc., of which Sol Lesser is president. The arrangement is said to be a partnership that affects only Grauman's Hollywood theater, and was entered into to place a larger portion of important first run films at the new house's disposal.

"Without prejudice to any new theater enterprise, it may be said truthfully that the supply of screen entertainment is not equal to the demand unless contracts entered into many months ago provide it," Grauman is quoted.

BURY FRANK BACON IN CALIFORNIA

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—Frank Bacon, noted actor and author of "Lightnin'," in which he starred for three years, died here today. He was 58 and born at Marysville, Cal. After memorial services at the Blackstone theater the body will be removed to Mountain View, Cal.

American History to be Filmed in Sight of Multitude

The Story

The motion picture industry, ever alert and ready to serve the public welfare, announces a great national celebration for 1923 in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Monroe doctrine, which has assured the territorial integrity of the three Americas for a century.

This celebration will be held in the city of Los Angeles, California, during the month of June. It will take the form of an American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Industrial Exposition.

The Historical Revue

The American Historical Revue will be the first of its kind ever staged.

This revue has received the written endorsements of eminent scholars representing some of the greatest educational institutions in the United States.

The scope and magnitude of the work can be approximated when it is stated that from three to five years will be required in which to complete the task.

This revue will open with a premiere unequalled in revue or exposition history.

The Premiere

The tentative program is:

From 8 to 9 P. M., electrical parade with stars and queens in illuminated throne floats.

From 9 to 10 P. M., official inspection of the revue and exposition, President Harding, the governor, the mayor, stars, queens and other dignitaries participating.

From 10 P. M. to 12 M., stars' and queens' ball.

At 12 o'clock—MIDNIGHT—the President will proclaim the official opening to be followed by a pyrotechnic display, the queen of the revue pressing the button that will furnish the spark that will fire the opening flare bomb.

At 1 A. M., exposition breakfast, the first event of its kind ever held.

At 2 A. M., all stars' and queens' reception and ball.

At sunrise, taps for the premiere, followed by reveille for the public opening.

The Presentation

The revue will be presented in tabloid and melodramatic form on the biggest stage ever built.

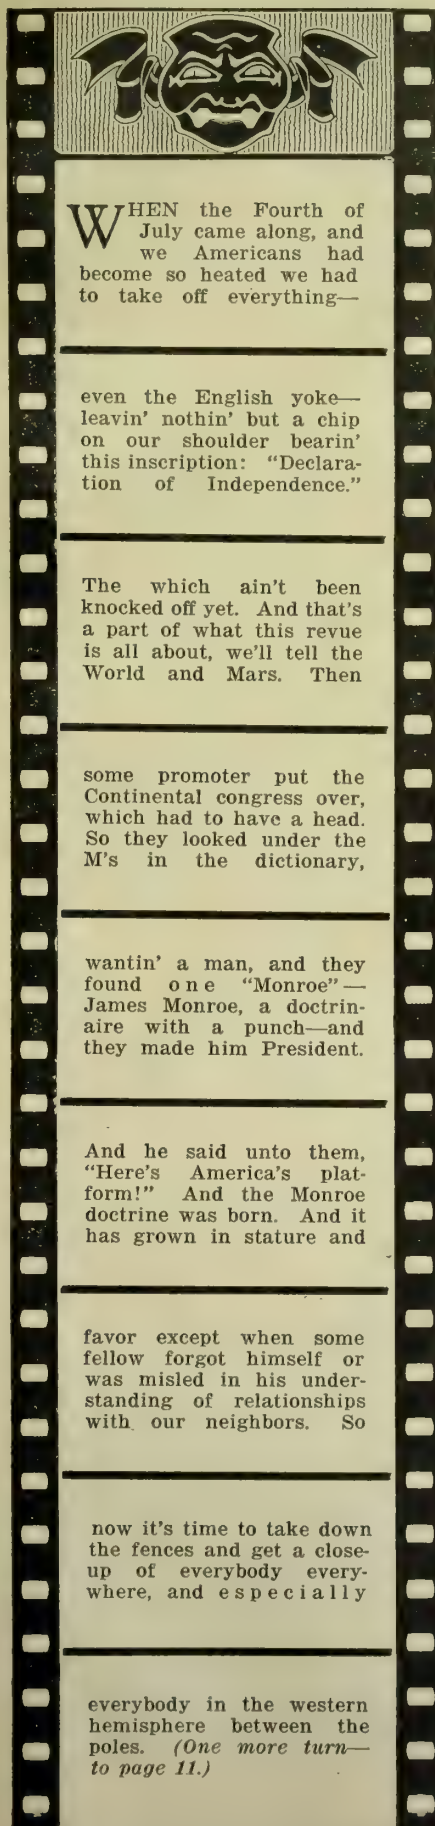

This stage will be equipped with revolving center and two horse show rings in order that patrons may view all of the acts staged from every angle.

A water course, replete with water falls, electric fountains, oriental and primitive barges and birch bark canoes, deep pools for fancy diving exhibitions and all else that will contribute to a setting. Aquatic sports unapproached will be added as a mark of motion picture industry accomplishment.

Thirty-Day Feast

A jury of scholars has decreed that thirty days will be required to stage this first annual event comprising the high lights of American history.

These high lights are to be selected by a special commission of representative men and women from universities and historical societies throughout this country.

Some approximation of the educational value of this movement can be had from a few of the high lights to be presented, such as:

- The discovery of America.
- The first English settlement.
- The first continental congress.
- The founding of the army and navy.
- The birth of the American flag.
- The Declaration of Independence.

Music

The art of music will be emphasized through the entire revue by one of the most complete, instructive and entertaining presentations ever given.

It will consist of the evolution of music, going back to that mystic past when music "soothed the savage breast" and following its course down through the ages to the finished symphonies of the hour.

This presentation contemplates the crude reed pipes of Biblical times, the weird Chinese strains, the tom-tom of the savage, in brief, a revelation in racial music by racial peoples.

Terpsichorean Art

The evolution of the dance will, also, constitute a part of every night's program in the interest of this institutional contribution to grace and beauty.

It will encompass this art from the reign of David, 1000 B. C., when dancers rhymed to music of timbrels and sweet psalteries, down through the time of Belshazzar's feast, when over and above the dance, that king saw "the handwriting on the wall," and on through medieval history to the aboriginal and the modern interpretative dances, ending with the most brilliant and colorful dance of all time.

Machine Gun Action

There will be a rapid fire change of program every night.

Amplifiers, annunciators and technical lighting effects—the last words in public audience satisfaction—will assure patrons 100 per cent results in the presentation of this marvelous array of constructive and comprehensive entertainment.

This revue will mark a new era in the exposition world because, in addition to the foregoing features, the standards of which are to be raised beyond the measure of past production, there will be a new and forceful innovation in the industrial exhibit field, One which has received the unanimous approval verdict of representative business men who know exhibit values.

Industrial Exhibits

Revue has been staged from time immemorial, but their themes have been limited to the arts, largely. Now comes this innovation in the revue world, due to the industrial vision of the motion picture industry. It's a case of "Mohammed going to the mountain," for heretofore, exhibits have sat down and waited for the people: now the people will sit down and wait for the exhibits. This is the age of new precedents and consequent progress, and because of the fact, exhibits will have the center of the stage at this revue and exposition.

Revue Offers Something Reel to Think and Talk About

The Innovation

The number of exhibits will be limited and so selected as to constitute what President McKinley referred to in his renowned address at the Pan-American exposition, Buffalo, 1901, when he said "Expositions are time-keepers of progress and, as such, are an inspiration and spur to bigger and better things industrially and commercially."

This innovation proposes that every exhibitor be furnished an automobile truck equipped with a platform containing approximately two hundred square feet, on which he may install his exhibit in the form of an industrial float.

Industrial Floats

The exhibit innovation further proposes that these floats be presented on the stage in the same manner as will be the historical features.

Each float to be presented on the turntable where it will be revolved before a great concourse of people and, while being so presented, they will be spot-lighted and otherwise stressed, in a setting never equaled on any stage, by the best illuminating engineers known to the profession.

Filming the Exhibits

Then it is proposed to film every float while on the stage in action, under the utmost, possible favorable circumstances and this film, when complete, will constitute a series of reels covering an illuminated industrial pageant more than five miles long, which will be shown on the screen throughout the world.

High-lighting this industrial pageant film, will be all of the brilliancy that comes from the coloring which music, art and history divisions add to the ensemble.

On Permanent Display

Then these floats are to be taken from the stage to exhibit buildings where they will be transferred to spaces and there exhibited for such length of time as may be contracted for.

It is proposed that all stage presentations, float designs and the advice of a trained float builder will be furnished by the revue and exposition to all exhibitors who desire such.

The Climax

The crowning feature of each day's performance consisting of art, industry and the sciences staged in a symphony of color and beauty surpassing anything ever seen outside of New York city, will be the pyrotechnic dance of the ages—a sequel to all that has gone before—a tribute to motion picture industry accomplishment.

Censor Hears Knell

Five thousand more persons voted on censorship in Massachusetts than did on the Volstead enforcement measure. The vote was 310,739 against the reform measure, and 122,103 for it. Newspapers of Massachusetts were 92 per cent strong for a free screen. Even Boston's city censor, John M. Casey, opposed it. Casey issued a statement saying:

"The overwhelming plurality means, in my opinion, the death knell of state boards of censorship in the United States."

The industry's anti-censorship campaign in Massachusetts was handled by C. C. Pettijohn and Jack Connelly from the office of Will Hays, although the Hays organization was not made to appear in the fight.

WE'RE just neighbors anyhow.

Most of us don't realize that a neighborhood is just a big family.

This family ought to put all their feet under the same table more often.

The centennial anniversary of the Monroe doctrine is a sort of command along this line. Everybody is falling into line for the jubilee.

When this revue is over everybody will know just how the three Americas darwinianized from the savage of 1492 to the flapper of 1923.

Ten Commandments Win

The ten commandments, which have ruled the saintly lives of many people in all the Christian eras, are to be filmed. But none of the religious societies or scriptural film organizations are concerned with the proposed production.

Instead, the ten commandments are to be presented upon the screen by Cecil DeMille, director of "Don't Change Your Husband," "Why Change Your Wife?" "Old Wives For New," "Forbidden Fruit," "Affairs of Anatol," etc.

DeMille recently ran an idea contest in a Los Angeles newspaper. Eight persons suggested the ten commandments as the theme of his next picture. He declared this idea the winner, and the suggestors will receive $1000 each, or a total of more than $8000. DeMille declares it the greatest subject ever, and says the film should make a fortune.

Close F. P.-L. Convention

Today witnessed the close of the convention of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation in Los Angeles—first gathering of its kind on the Pacific coast.

The week the delegates were in the city brought forth many developments of importance to the film industry. One of these was the announcement by Adolph Zukor that Paramount forces were to produce 39 pictures in the next six months. One of the purposes in bringing the department of distribution to Los Angeles for its convention was to discuss plans with the department of production. Zukor also said that Charles De Rochet, French actor, has been engaged for Paramount productions.

The convention followed closely the program arranged for it.

On Monday, following arrival of the "Paramount special," delegates were welcomed by Mayor Cryer, representatives of the Hollywood and Los Angeles chambers of commerce, motion picture actors and thousands of spectators.

On Tuesday night a banquet and dance was held at the studio. It was attended by 325 guests.

Business sessions were held by delegates at the Hotel Ambassador daily, the only interruption occurring on Friday when delegates made a tour of the Paramount studio. Friday night a second banquet in honor of the delegates was held at the Hotel Ambassador.

Delegates are scheduled to leave for the east tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. Summing up the motives animating the convention, Zukor said:

"We are beginning a new era in the motion picture industry. The convention was held in Los Angeles additionally to familiarize our field men, or distribution department, with what is done in the production department, and to instill in their minds the fact that the films they are handling are really live, breathing bits of humanity."

DISTRIBUTOR HERE

E. W. Hammons, head of Educational Film exchanges, arrived here last week to confer with his producers. Educational releases Christie comedies, Lloyd Hamilton comedies, Mermaid, Torchy, and Cameo comedies, scenic pictures and other short subjects.

Hammons is on his annual trip to the coast and is accompanied by Sidney B. Brennecke of the New York organization, who will possibly remain in Los Angeles to look after the interests of Educational.

DOWN the sea of the centuries man sails the ship of his dreams, seeking the harbor of happiness.

This is the deathless expedition of the ages. Centuries slip into eternity, philosophies flourish and fall, truths live their hour or two and are truths no longer, but the quest for happiness goes on forever. The discovery of continents, the making of nations, the conquest of earth's forces—these are incidents of the great adventure.

In pursuit of happiness man has enlisted art, which is of the spirit; science, which is of the mind; and industry, which is of the flesh. In the yearning of their own hearts for happiness Michelangelo and Pasteur helped others toward happiness; the one with his art, the other with his great humane discoveries.

And in the yearning of millions for happiness America set up a new form of government, reared cities where desolation was, drove railroads through mountains, converted barren plains into fertile fields, made new discoveries and inventions for the enjoyment and advancement of mankind, and created a great force called advertising, to carry to the doors of the people the message of a higher standard of living.

The quest for happiness goes forever on, not because happiness is an illusion, but because its ideals are forever advancing.

The work of industry is to keep pace with these ideals. The work of advertising is to open the eyes of men to the treasures which industry bears.

How the meddler was fooled

A BUNCH of boys were playing in a vacant lot. They had invented a new game, and each wanted to gain the advantage for himself in the game.

Most of the neighbors enjoyed seeing the new game.

But some of them kicked because the boys were a little noisy and rough in playing it.

One bitter-faced old man in spectacles and black clothes even stalked out to the vacant lot and folded his hands squarely on his wishbone and scolded the boys.

"I do not like your roughness, Young Men. It is demoralizing the entire neighborhood. I have summoned a policeman and when he arrives I shall demand that he stand right here and watch you, Young Men."

That put an awful crimp in the new game. The boys stopped trying to improve the game, and devoted themselves to being rougher than ever when the cop turned his head.

Then one kid called the others over in the fence corner.

"Let's cut out the slugging, fellers, until we get this ol' cop offan our trail. We haven't been doing anything wrong. That old crab's the only one kicking. Let's go together and tell all the neighbors our side."

They did, and the neighbors laughed indulgently and called off the cop.

"Guess you boys won't demoralize us," they said. "Go ahead and play. We like to see you."

So the boys did, and worked out a great game.*

**If you are reading this to someone outside the motion picture industry, and they don't quite get the drift, you might explain to them now that the boys were young picture companies, the new game was—well, guess! the neighbors are the public, the wry-faced old man a reformer, and the cop a censor. Oh, yes, and the vacant lot was Hollywood. Then they'll probably want you to start over again so they'll understand the symbolical stuff. Be patient with 'em!*

vacant lots around the neighborhood, and even in other parts of town.

Quite a lot of people watched their playing. But the spectators overlooked the fine points. In fact they seemed to like it better when the boys played a little roughly.

But there were lots more people who wouldn't go near the playgrounds. They had been prejudiced about the game and about the boys playing it by various stories they had heard. One or two of the boys had been bad, and the sour-faced old gentleman in black took care to circulate a lot of talk about those boys, particularly as though the others were bad, too.

But the boys didn't care. They were having a good time, and some of the people liked them. What did they care about the others?

Then one night there were hardly any neighbors watching the game. The boys were a little surprised.

When it happened again and again they got worried. They made all sorts of changes in the game, but it didn't do much good.

Then one of the boys cornered the rest of them again.

"Our game's good—we all know it," he said. "But a lot of these people don't. We ought to figure out a way to tell them all about it, get them interested in it—especially the people that never have been interested."

The boys talked it over among themselves. They scribbled on backs of envelopes with lead pencils. Finally they perfected their plan to win the interest of everyone in their game.

Old Man World's fountainpen is ready

That isn't the end of the story. That's just where we start. That's the reason for this exposition number of Camera! We're just starting to tell the world about the first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. And the exposition itself is going to buttonhole Old Man World and secure his signature on the dotted line for a fine new enthusiasm for motion pictures. Terms reasonable—just see half a dozen pictures now, and a couple a week for the rest of his life!

Production has started at the Federal studio on a two-reel comedy with Fatty Karr titled "Long Skirts," directed by Bruce Mitchell.

New Company Starts

"Scarlet Shadows," the first production of the newly incorporated Elite Productions, Inc., is already being filmed under direction of Frederick Reel, Jr. The company has an authorized capital of $250,000. It has made its headquarters at Brentwood studio.

"We have purchased four well known books and stories and have contracted with Frederick Reel, Jr., for twelve of his magazine stories," states C. S. Harrison, president of the company. All are to be produced with all-star casts.

The cast engaged for "Scarlet Shadows" includes Frank Mayo, Miriam Cooper, Mitchell Lewis, Stuart Holmes, Josef Swickard, Frank Leigh, Eric Mach, Harold D. Mills, Jim Alamo, James Truax. Reel's assistants are J. W. Irving and Arthur J. Coe. Sydney Clifton is art director, and Harry Fowler and Joe Walker are cameramen for the company.

MAKE PUBLICITY PICTURE

Ward Wing is directing a comedy publicity picture at Universal including Priscilla Dean, Virginia Valli, Herbert Rawlinson, Edward Gibson, Roy Stewart, Jack Mulhall, William Desmond, Gladys Walton, Mabel Julienne Scott and all of the prominent people now connected with production at Universal.

Al Martin, of "Exhausts" column fame is writing story and titles.

Filming of "The Spider and the Rose," Bennie Zeidman's latest all-star independent production, is approaching a final climax. Gaston Glass is playing the leading male role opposite Alice Lake.

Bruce Mitchell is now handling the megaphone for a series of fun films starring Fatty Karr.

STUDIO RENAMED

The old Louis B. Mayer studio has been enlarged, divided into two distinct studios, and given a new name. It will be called the Mayer-Schulberg studio. The old stages have been divided between the B. P. Schulberg and the Mayer organizations. New stages are being erected to accommodate the activities of the two separate corporations that will hereafter occupy the big plant.

CASTING BY TELEGRAPH

Edwin Carewe is casting for his next production, "The Girl of the Golden West," by telegraph. Carewe has negotiated with David Belasco, who owns the stage rights, and Paramount, which holds screen rights, for the play. He wired Wallace Fox, his assistant, the players he wanted, and Fox is getting them. Carewe plans to leave New York December 1 for Los Angeles to start the production for First National release. Paramount filmed the play about six years ago.

Screen Rights Purchased

By Goldwyn, to Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, "Wild Oranges."

By Goldwyn, to Edgar Wallace's novel, "Captain of Souls."

By Arthur F. Beck to "The Destroying Angel" by Louis Joseph Vance, for production by Leah Baird. (Associated Exhibitors).

By Edwin Carewe to "The Girl of the Golden West," from David Belasco and Famous Players-Lasky.

PICKS NEXT STORY

Leah Baird has settled on "The Destroying Angel" as her second production at Ince studio.

Many scenes of "The White Frontier," Dorothy Phillips' next starring vehicle, are laid in Northwestern Canada. A majority of the location work will be done around Truckee, Cal. Upon the completion of scenes there, the company will return to the United studio to film interiors, and will then proceed, for special shots, to Montreal and the Canadian northwest.

Continuity By—

Bernard McConville, "Alice in Screenland," Phyllis Haver's five-reel comedy drama for Mack Sennett.

Completing Series

Henry McCarty is completing the last feature of his western pictures starring Lester Cuneo. The ten were written by the director who, in 1915, first entered a studio as clay modeller.

After studying the technique of picture production "on the lot" at close range, McCarty ventured a scenario, "Virtuous Sinners," which was accepted and produced by Emmett Flynn. His success in writing and, eventually, directing, began with that effort.

McCarty is brother of Francis McCarty, who won world-wide fame in 1905 for his invention of radio telephony. Henry is a native son, his forebears living in California since 1848.

In the Bosky Dell

IN this age of revival by screen mentors, we have often wondered why they have passed by that ditty which stirred so many to smiles, if not tears—

"I'm a wild little prairie flower, growing wilder, hour by hour, etc."

It would seem that there must be a place in the comebacks for the esthetic song-poem, each chorus of which exists upon the vibrant cry:

"I'm wild! I'm wild!"

After due consideration, and the receipt of an article sent the rounds of screen publications, including Camera!, we have decided that the soulful composition was not meant to eat up film footage, but rather was intended to reincarnate, in solemn editorial, expression anent the condition of pictures today, and the future.

Could it be that the above song child of a truly prophetic soul has anything to do with this utterance from the communication mentioned?

"Pictures are just as good as human ingenuity can make them for general great human audiences."

* * *

We have this word from the editorial office of a well known producing corporation. You will wonder at once which organization this pronouncement is from. Some may guess it is from Griffith's studio; others will surmise the promoters of "The Four Horsemen," or "The Miracle Man," or "Blood and Sand," or "Robin Hood," or "Knighthood," or "Humoresque."

There is a little surprise waiting for you. It is not from either of these sources.

It is from Donald H. Clarke, Goldwyn editorial office, New York. Continuing his reassuring statement, Mr. Clarke says:

"Nobody will deny that the best writing brains in the world have been recruited by the producers in their never-ceasing struggle to reach the top and stay there."

Mr. Clarke mentions three famous fictionists in proof of this statement, one of whom is actually at work in a studio. He adds:

"But the list of famous novelists, short story writers and dramatists who have turned their efforts to the screen, or who are planning to, is too long for the purpose of this article."

This leaves us all somewhat in the dark, but the Goldwyn payroll must carry some nifty secrets if this be true. Famous fictionists and playwrights are somewhat scarce around the grounds of other studios at present. Perhaps they are out to lunch.

Surely Mr. Clarke does not include the names of those whose published stories merely have been purchased, to be adapted by the John Does and Mary Roes of scenario and continuity departments.

But there are more glad surprises in this mimeographed epistle sent broadcast to trade publications. One of these is a rather startling confession which reads:

"Anyone who can demonstrate that he can tell, either in script, or on the screen before release, a picture that is sure fire, from a picture that is doomed to failure, might reasonably enough expect an income of about $1,000,000 a year."

This is a new light shed upon the production center which should cause writers to hesitate, and manufacturers to pause and consider whether to continue, or lock up shop and take the scads to Monte Carlo.

Millions spent each year upon productions the merit of all being in such doubt that, even after production, the manufacturer cannot know whether to cast his offspring into the gurgling waters of oblivion, or try it upon a world which is tossing its shekels at such pictures as, "Wild Bill's Weird Vengeance," "Whose Wife?" "How Many Children?" "Where's Your Next One?" and other noble features, which have been recruited from the choicest brains of all nations?

The situation is so fraught with philosophy as to stump the average novice. Studio managements, after recovering from the shock of being confronted with the naked truth at last, should take this as a terrible warning and mend their ways.

At any rate, the wild, little prairie flower has bloomed again, and that's something.

Art and Boxoffice

SO much good gospel comes to this department, via Uncle Sam's mails, that we wax lazy but, at the same time, hopeful that the influx will never cease. Just at the time that this question of art is most perplexing, a happy little letter comes from that noted retreat, Reno. It is worth reading. You shall have it.

Fade to—

RENO, Nev., Nov. 15, 1922.—Dear Mr. Wing—What's the matter with a slogan for the Screen Writers' page? I suggest: Art and the Boxoffice—Brothers under the Skin.

I do not mean the art of a Stanlaws. Paradoxically, we do not go to the 'pictures' to see pictures, any more than we buy a magazine for its beautiful cover-piece; but nobody is going to deny that beauty of cover-piece accelerates the buying.

Why do we go to the movies? To see a story or a drama—I am naming them in the order of their charm. Note that word charm. I'm coming back to it. We are glad we went when the story or the drama is there, though the art of a Stanlaws be absent; we are sorry we went when the story or the drama is not there, however conspicuous the art of the Stanlaws; and in the latter case we hesitate about going again.

What, then, do I mean by art in my slogan? (How absurd and misleading to refer to the moving picture as a new art! What is it but a new medium for the oldest of arts—story-telling and drama-depicting?)

My slogan refers to the art that, for instance, manifests itself in conceiving, and establishing, a relationship between the casket story and the bond story in "The Merchant of Venice," and in discovering in the casket story the germ alike of the complication and of the resolution of the bond story. No space for multiplying instances.

Such art is not found in the tale. It is discernible in the story (technically so-called) and is characteristic of the drama. Which of the last two possesses the greater "charm?" The tale admittedly possesses none. Why do so many adapted alleged stories fall down as movie plays? Because they are mere tales? Their only title to be called stories is that they appear in periodicals.

Now, then, to prove that art and the box-office are brothers under the skin: What—not spasmodically, but inveterately—brings the shekels to the boxoffice? Isn't it charm? And isn't charm the one excuse and breath of art? If not, Robert Louis Stevenson did not know what he was talking about. Running to adapted tales and fires and circuses gets tiresome; charm is perennial in its lure.

Your page, and the announced new policy of the corporation, are the silver lining to the movie cloud.

AUGUSTUS TILDEN.

At the Bar

The announcement of perfect pictures for the coming season of 1923 is joyous news indeed. But, somehow, it recalls a story of the court room.

Addressing the prisoner, Washington Napoleon Johnson, the court solemnly said:

"The court hereby sentences you to be hanged by the neck until you are dead, dead, dead! between the hours of midnight and sunrise, August 15."

The negro staggered and grabbed the railing for support as he cried:

"Fo' God, jedge! you don't mean dis comin' August, does you?"

Current Reviews

"The Impossible Mrs. Bellew"

THERE is no chance for a picture of this title to fail while women, from the unfortunate wealthy who "haven't a single thing to wear," down to the lucky one who has one Sunday best, are able to move from home, even with the aid of the crutch. Indeed, mention the proximity of an "impossible" woman, and one might well expect to witness miracles in the sick room.

And, if quite a bunch of the sterner sex is crippled in the rush, no one should be surprised. There are men who will risk one optic, at least, upon this interesting specimen of the feminine gender. So far as the uncritical public is concerned, this screen production will prove satisfactory entertainment for the moment. It has more real ingredients than the average program release, and much more cause for its existence, several very moral points being aired which strike the truth in no uncertain manner.

Also Gloria Swanson supplies two scenes which mean more in point of appeal than anything she has done for a very long time upon the screen. They are mother-heart appeals which grip.

Assuming the cold and cruel attitude which every critic is supposed to don with horrid laughter while viewing a product, we might mention that this is one of the most astonishing continuities that ever attempted to put over a bold story. Time after time it wobbles up to something which promises to be "interesting," and then slumps to a full stop. It promises several Cecil's, but drowns in a pool of watered milk. Perhaps the director did not deign to encroach.

As usual, a competent cast does the acting and Miss Swanson gets the sympathy. Her role is quite beyond the star's limitations. She is forced into familiar closeups and off-repeated facial expressions many times to save scenes and episodes which demand much more of her.

Also there is a feeling of falsity about the foreign scenes and the hinted debauch which hardly passes the foolishly-drunk stage. The "impossible" Mrs. Bellew of the Paramount production, is quite impossible after the transition from the wronged mother to the daring butterfly who is supposed to shock people with her reckless abandonment. You never quite believe in her.

June Elvidge, who vamps Mrs. Bellew's husband away from his home and family, is an actress and proves it. But someone makes the mistake of playing her too hard and cruel in the role of a woman who lures.

Robert Cane, as the lured, portrayed with great success about the meanest character we have seen upon the screen for some time.

Outside of Mickey Moore, as the little son, the former two provided most of the histrionic values.

Conrad Nagel, who wins the heart-broken but shocking Mrs. Bellew, thereby winning mental bets for every man, woman and child in the audience, was likeable but, as a character, not much to tie to.

Richard Wayne, Gertrude Astor, Frank Elliott, Herbert Standing, Helen Dunbar, Pat Moore, Arthur Hull and Clarence Burton fill in the niches.

William D. Taylor, director of "The Top of New York".

"The Top of New York"

THE plot of "The Top of New York" hasn't enough material for a five or six-reeler but it has been developed by George Hopkins in the continuity. The production moves along in an interesting way. The picture has good entertainment value. Especially it will please the kiddies, as it deals with toy stores and Christmas time.

This simple romance of the roof tops was directed by William D. Taylor. The most notable results he obtained are with Mary Jane Irving, the baby lead. Taylor kept the production free from complication, inserted genuine comedy touches, and delicately handled the romance.

May McAvoy is pretty and gives natural response to situations in the story. Her poses of the live doll in the toy store will bring joy to children.

Walter McGrail, as the artist who lives in the housetop bungalow, improves his previous work by remaining the serious minded fellow, always poised and thoroughly human.

Mary Jane Irving is one of the few screen children who acts as a child does in real life. And here we thank the author, or whoever determined this kiddie's action, for allowing Mary Jane to remain natural. She does not solve the world's problems but she absorbs attention all through the picture.

Carrie Clarke Ward, the shanty Irish character, with Arthur Hoyt her intoxicated spouse, furnish the comedy.

Photography by James Van Trees shows excellent night effects.

R. W.

"West of Chicago"

BUCK Jones, who disports upon the Fox lot, is the stunt hero in this production, sandwiched in between two corking vaudeville acts at Hillstreet.

The picture, although carrying nothing new in situation, is entertaining as a filler, for it gives Jones a chance to whoop 'er up to fullest extent, including the usual fist-fight with the villainous ranch foreman near the conclusion.

The fiction story, from which "West of Chicago" was taken, was crowded with interesting possibilities, but the adapter and director have taken but light advantage of these. As a light, familiar vehicle for Buck Jones' disportation, this will please Jones' fans.

Renee Adoree was the winsome leading lady.

"Affinities"

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART evidently didn't have motion pictures in mind when she wrote "Affinities" for though the printed page may be clever, there is little screen value to the novel. The action was planned out by H. L. Jackson who wrote the continuity and in doing so strung four of the five reels out into an endless automobile chase that ended nowhere. Ward Lascelle, the director, made his characters ridiculous.

In summing things up, "Affinities" is a series of long and close shots of Colleen Moore in an assortment of attitudes with occasional reference to other members of the cast.

As a co-star, John Bowers is sadly neglected. However, what there is of his work is natural and pleasing.

Colleen Moore is cute though she over-expresses herself in many situations, due no doubt to direction.

Jack Duffy furnishes the comedy for the picture. It is the kind of humor we find in the funny papers and as forced. Duffy is a good rural type and his work filled the requirements.

Grace Gordon had little chance in the second lead to do any real acting but her work pleased.

Joe Bonner as the cake-eating type of husband was well cast and played his part appropriately.

The photography was average.

James Chapin, assistant to director Hugo Ballin at Goldwyn, has a sister who for two seasons has been one of the leading beauties of the Ziegfeld "Follies" and "Frolic." Marjorie Chapin has appeared in several pictures. She will soon arrive in Hollywood for her first visit.

Adele Farrington will be seen as a member of a "road show" troupe in "The Scarlet Lily."

BRONSON-HOWARD DIES

The body of George Bronson-Howard, 38, dramatist and novelist, who for years has been writing for motion pictures, was found in his apartments Monday under circumstances that indicated death self-inflicted by gas. Clifford Wheeler, assistant director, and Jay Belasco, actor, who lived in the same apartment house at 2400 Highland avenue, found the body of their friend in a gas-filled closet.

Howard was born January 7, 1884. A career as war correspondent for the London Chronicle during part of the Russo-Japanese war, and on the staffs of the Baltimore American, Brooklyn Citizen, New York Herald, San Francisco Chronicle, and on Sunset, Popular and Smith's magazine, preceded his writing for the stage and the screen. He was employed by Universal at the time of his death.

A letter to his second wife indicated that his marital life had been unhappy.

Joseph B. Walker, chief cameraman for Nell Shipman, and collaborator with inventor D. A. Whitson in his picturization of the Einstein theory or relativity, is himself an inventor. Walker has several camera devices to his credit, and is now working on a number of new improvements.

Clarence Geldert of Paramount pictures and Edward Johnson of the Chicago Opera company have applied for the privilege of using Doreen McClure's poem, "Sometimes," in private recitals. Miss McClure has written and published a number of interesting poems during the two years she has been affiliated with Famous Players.

Marguerite De La Motte is winning fame as a composer of dance music. Her latest fox trot was introduced at the Club Royale, where it was voted the title of "Mediterranean Moon," while another, "Jacamamy Lullaby," is now being published.

As the result of negotiations by Frederick G. Becker, director, and Robert J. Trimble, president, of Arthur Trimble productions, the series of two-reel old world romances starring little Arthur Trimble, will be released on the independent market by Anchor Film distributors.

VON STROHEIM SIGNS

Erich Von Stroheim signed a long-term contract with the Goldwyn Pictures corporation. He will also act in some of his pictures.

Buster Keaton recently made "a bear of a picture" with John Brown prominent in the cast. This good-natured animal answers to all commands issued by Bud White. Some lap dog, eh?

Repertory Theatre Active

The Co-operative Repertory Theatre are now rehearsing their second production, a Russian extravaganza "Ivanoushka" by Irma Peixotto Sellars. Harl McInroy is directing, and the ballet is under the supervision of Nattie Frie.

The cast includes many in the moving picture profession. Glory Raye plays the title role and is supported by Esther Ralston, Miriam Nelke, John Gough, Deindré, John Mortlock, H. W. and C. N. Ralston, Rollin Arenz and others.

Doreen McClure, who has been doing excellent work at Lasky's for the past two years, recently received an offer from Miami to join a company starting production at their studios.

Lon Young has been appointed director of advertising and publicity for Warner Brothers' organization in the east, succeeding Eddie Bennis, who is now Goldwyn's director of exploitation.

Wesley Ruggles will direct Wallace Reid in his next picture, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime." Jacqueline Logan will return from the east in time to play opposite the star, who has been on a vacation.

"Miss Los Angeles"

The beautiful girl on the cover, with the sparkling crown "L. A.", is Penrhyn Stanlaws' conception of Miss Los Angeles, queen of the exposition.

Before it opens, patrons of the first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition will acclaim some beauty of filmdom queen, and she will be crowned at the premier.

While Stanlaws had a flesh and blood girl as model for the Camera! cover depicting Miss Los Angeles, this particular girl is not necessarily the queen to be chosen. She, in this picture, symbolizes the gracious beauty that Miss Los Angeles must possess.

Every lovely woman in motion picture will probably be nominated on the lists of candidates for queenhood of the exposition.

DISCOVERED BY STANLAWS

The newest "discovery" of Stanlaws, noted director of Paramount pictures, as well as world-famous magazine illustrator, posed for his sketch of Miss Los Angeles.

She is Marjorie Fayre, and is 14 years old. She played the fairy queen in Stanlaws' production "Singed Wings." The artist says that in her he has struck a vein of pure beauty.

Miss Fayre is a blonde with a Burne-Jones chin and slightly retrouse nose. Her other features are classic in their lines. Her hair is fluffy and golden. Her eyes are dark blue. She is five feet five inches high and weighs 115 pounds.

WALKER IS HOST

A party of film folk, including Clarence Geldert of the Lasky studio, Mrs. Geldert, Dorothy Dorsey, Doreen McClure, and Sheldon Krag Johnson, were guests of Joseph B. Walker, chief cameraman for the Nell Shipman company, at Ocean Park, to see the preview of "The Grubstake," which Walker photographed. The party was in honor of Marjorie Warfield of the cast.

Marjorie Warfield, who has been ingenue and comedienne with the Nell Shipman company, Century comedies, Hallroom Boys and Carter DeHaven, recently received an offer to go on the Orpheum circuit in a one-act skit. She declined in favor of picture work.

Overheard

The motion picture industry as a whole is planning a film production showing be made during the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture exposition next June.

American history of revolutionary days, to But the industry as a whole may have some competition from an individual. The individual is a writer-director who is incorporating for $500,000 to produce an original story of revolutionary days. His film will show the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Washington crossing the Delaware, Patrick Henry's speech, and the Boston tea party. The writer-director refused an eastern offer of $10,000 for his story, preferring to produce himself. He will start in February.

It had been announced that Antonio Moreno would play the part of Rupert in "Rupert of Hentzau." Due to the fact that the Lasky company also had called upon his services, it was mutually agreed between the Selznick company and the actor to cancel the contract.

The Truth About the Make-up Schools is Told

For two months Camera! has been exposing the methods of the so-called "schools" of the motion picture make-up and acting.

Camera! has shown how these places advertise in the classified help-wanted columns for actors—"experience unnecessary,"—how many of them pretend to be casting for the studios, how most of them promise the applicant a job on completion of the lessons, and how few of the graduates ever appear before a motion picture camera.

That Camera!'s revelations of the unscrupulous persons who prey on ambitious, screen-struck young men and women has had some effect, is evident from the hearings now being conducted in the offices of the state labor commission, 928 Pacific Finance building, Los Angeles.

At the first hearing commission offices were thronged with persons who had told their stories to Camera! and were then ready to tell them to the California commissioner of labor. The afternoon passed before a sixth of the complainants were heard. The second hearing was held last Wednesday. The date of other hearings may be learned from the labor commission office; telephone Pico 3621.

Following the hearing Wednesday, Deputy Labor Commissioner Barker ordered M. J. Lynch either to forfeit his license to operate the Classic Film Actors agency, or to discontinue his make-up school. Lynch chose the latter. Ivan Kahn, Gerald Kline and Don Saunders, who managed the actors agency, are arranging to form an independent agency with office in Hollywood.

Since Camera! printed the truth about fake film schools several Los Angeles newspapers barred their advertising column to the movie acting ads.

The Times for a week conducted a campaign exposing several schools, and modestly assumes credit for the labor commissioner's present activities. Camera! is glad that other forces had a part in the crusade. Camera!'s only aim was to wake up officials and the public to what was going on.

It might be noted, however, that when the Times reporters first called at the labor offices for information they found well-thumbed copies of Camera! on the official desks.

Camera! believes its professional readers, the great bulk of its readers, are weary of the "acting and make-up schools," with whom they have no contract or interest.

Therefore, while Camera! will continue its vigilance over the activities of those who represent themselves to be of motion pictures and give our industry a black eye by nefarious practices, it will work in co-operation with state and city officials. It will no longer inflict the details of the acting schools on its readers, except such news stories as it considers of unusual interest.

TED TAYLOR.

Eight articles were printed in Camera!'s series exposing methods of schools of movie acting and make-up. The eight issues will be mailed to any address on receipt of 50 cents; separate copies, 10 cents each. Principal companies dealt with were:

Youngest Director- General Producing Series of Specials

Albert Rogell, whose picture appeared on the cover of last week's Camera!, is the screen's youngest director. He was born in Oklahoma in 1900, and received his education in the public schools of Spokane, Wash. Later, he entered Washington State College, where he studied to become a professor of philosophy.

After school hours he appeared in stock at one of the Spokane theaters, and soon became so interested in theatrical work that he neglected his college studies. He finally dropped them entirely when he was offered work with a company at a Spokane film plant. Besides working as an actor in the picture, Rogell served as technical man, assistant cameraman, prop boy and scene shifter for the company. Florence Turner, Mitchell Lewis and others were being starred in the picture and Phil Rosen, who is now one of the screen's foremost directors, was then second cameraman.

Rogell took a liking to camera work, and under Rosen's tutoring he gained a broad knowledge of photography. At every opportunity he would study and experiment. He finally became so conversant with the art that he was later engaged by Andrew J. Callaghan to turn the crank for a series of feature stories starring Bessie Love.

After the completion of this series, Rogell wrote and directed a series of 32 western features starring Marion Aye and Bob Reeves, which were released by Western Pictures Exploitation.

He is now director-in-chief of a series of pictures exposing vice, which were written and are being financially supported by Angela C. Kaufman, whose object in presenting them to the screen is to benefit humanity through the abolishment of such evils as the narcotic traffic, the illegitimate child, capital punishment and others.

The task of directing a series of such difficult subjects was placed in Rogell's hands, after Mrs. Kaufman had combed the field for a man who was thoroughly conversant with all phases of film production, and whose study of human nature had been such as to warrant the successful production of her stories.

Rogell has the distinction of having directed his first story for the screen at the age of 19 and now, at the age of 22, is acting as director-general of a series of pictures that are intended to help bring about the suppression of vice.

A Message to Exhibitors

To whom it may concern:

The American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Industrial Exposition to be held under the direction and supervision of the motion picture industry in the city of Los Angeles next June will furnish the one, biggest opportunity for that great entertaining force, viz.:—the motion picture exhibitor—to see pictures in the making and get all there is in the realm of his contribution to civilization at one sitting.

Los Angeles is the synonym for Starland in the motion picture world. The greatest constellation of exhibitors, producers, stars, leading men and women, character men and women, juveniles, scenarists, directors, art directors, cameramen, electrical engineers and others who contribute to the animated screen the world has even witnessed, is here.

Then there are the trained animals of the screen which have delighted the multitudes of children of all ages from seven to seventy—they'll perform for you during the revue; therefore a sojourn in the motion picture capital of the world during the revue and exposition will be one long to be remembered by every exhibitor who can avail himself of a visit to the exposition.

Added to this galaxy of contributors will be the last word in theatrical houses, both exterior and interior, for here in the City of the Angels theaters have risen to heights in the art of building, decoration, lighting, heating, ventilation, seating and all else that go to make up patronage comfort and pleasure never before attained.

Here, where stars shine by day as well as by night, exhibitors will be shown the time of their lives because the revue and exposition will be just one thing after another until they will never want to be awakened from their dreams.

There will be a motion picture theater men's week with an exhibitors' ball among other events and, of course, Hollywood's celebrated studios will be turned over to you.

"Camera!"

That phrase means instant action wherever motion pictures are being made.

As the title of a magazine, "Camera!" means instant news of the activities of the studios.

The readers of Camera! know what's going on in motion pictures one to five weeks before the readers of any other publication. For Camera! is the only news publication published right among the studios. It's written and edited for professional people by professional people. It eliminates publicity hokum and confines itself to straight news facts, printed while they're still news.

Dramatic editors carry film news not available to contemporaries for weeks later by the simple expedient of subscribing to Camera!

Exhibitors who pride themselves on knowing what pictures are going to be available, get that information long before their competitors by subscribing to Camera!

Camera! criticisms are written from the professional angle, and are fearless and constructive.

Camera!'s "Pulse of the Studios" lists every studio, every producing company, and every director and his staff in the industry, and is corrected weekly to show the progress made on each picture.

Camera!'s screen writers' page, conducted by the dean of American photoplay writers and critics, William E. Wing, is a cleverly presented mine of information for the too often misguided writer whose aim is the screen.

What is your interest in motion pictures? Exercise your voting privileges and mark X in the proper space NOW.

Six Months' Pictures in Critical Review

"A Wide Open Town" (Selznick)—Conway Tearle tries to make good acting substitute for a poor story. Novel goes flat on screen.

"Always the Woman"—A hash of every conceivable story. Betty Compson leads herself to slaughter professionally by choosing her own story, etc. No box office value.

"Ashamed of Parents" (Warner Bros.) Noble idea executed in worst possible manner. Every old situation worked into story. Poor direction, continuity, action and photography. No box office value.

"Blood and Sand" (Paramount)—Success of picture laid to incomparable combination of June Mathis, scenario and continuity writer, Fred Niblo, director, and Rodolph Valentino, leading man. Star does greater work than in "Four Horsemen."

"Brawn of the North" (First National)—Again the wonder dog Strongheart holds the audience with his remarkable performance amid dangers of the snows. Should go better than same dog in "The Silent Call."

"Broadcasting" (Pathe)—Timely story of the radio craze with Johnny Jones and his bunch of clever kids in good comedy-drama.

"Broadway Rose" (Metro)—Another inevitable Mae Murray where she takes 'em off and puts 'em on in plain view of the audience. Star's admirers will like this one.

"Burning Sands" (Paramount)—Another sheik production with Milton Sills and Wanda Hawley, and strong entertainment value. Should draw.

"Colleen of the Pines" (F. B. O.)—Most of the moss got into the story, to the annoyance of all northwest mounted police. Jane Novak in her weakest one.

"Cops" (First National)—Buster Keaton in a comedy not his best or worst.

"Divorce Coupons" (Vitagraph)—A fair Corinne Griffith picture which depends upon the title to draw them. Fair.

"Don't Shoot" (Universal)—Story of "Come Through" re-hashed, re-acted and re-directed with uninteresting results. Herbert Rawlinson's name as star good.

"Dr. Jack" (Pathe)—Harold Lloyd in one of his best, but not the best. Will draw wherever Lloyd is liked.

"Flesh and Blood" (Irving Cummings). Scrambled story resulting in series of close-ups of Lon Chaney, upon whose name producer depends for selling possibilities. Story and star disappointing. Photography beautiful.

"Fools of Fortune"—A fair feature with good cast, but production drags a little. Title is best attraction.

"Forget-Me-Not" (Burstyn) — Bessie Love and Gareth Hughes in a highly interesting story heavy with genuine chapters of life. Good attraction.

"Free Air" (Hodkinson)—Story by Sinclair Lewis is only redeemer of this production. Titles are educational type. Cast unknown but work is fair. Author's name has box office value.

"French Heels"—Bad story and direction. Irene Castle cannot carry picture with her usual fashion review.

"Gay and Devilish" (F. B. O.)—Doris May is given too much rope in her first independent and flops. A gushy production with no redeeming power. Doris May's name will attract if fans don't read criticisms.

"Golf" (Vitagraph)—Larry Semon forgets his best gags in a maze of trick props. Some laughs. All right for his fans.

"Hearts Haven" (B. B. Hampton)—Story like Christian Science propaganda. All-star cast might attract fans.

"Her Gilded Cage" (Paramount)—Gloria Swanson tries to play Mae Murray in an adaptation from a stage play wherein the story is lost. Star the drawing power.

"Hope" (Hodkinson)—A gem in three reels, inspired from the famous painting. Little advertising value, but will please audiences wonderfully.

"I Am The Law"—Just one of an avalanche of N.W. mounted pictures with same plot and order of action. All star cast saves production.

"If You Believe It, It's So" (Paramount)—Thomas Meighan in a crook story. Twin to "While Satan Sleeps." Plot repetition may detract from interest. Star has great following.

"In the Name of the Law" (F. B. O.)—One man tries to write, direct and act in the picture. Emory Johnson's work shows divided attention between the three. Exploitation arouses interest.

"Just Tony" (Fox)—Tom Mix gives the leading role to his horse with excellent results. Equines do not mind inferior continuity. Fine attraction.

"Kindred of the Dust" (R. A. Walsh). Three reels of story made into six. Picture supported by work of noted cast which gives good box office value. Photography excellent and direction fair.

"Kisses" (Metro)—Ordinary program picture with Alice Lake for star, which may attract.

Denies Purchase of United Studio

First National won't take over United studio.

First National will produce 15 or 20 pictures a year, but will continue to make its major distribution, that of independently made films.

So declared Richard A. Rowland, former president of Metro and now general manager of Associated First National, on his arrival in Los Angeles Sunday. He is surveying production conditions in the film capitol.

Rowland verified the news that First National was now a member of the Hays group, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

"Life's Darn Funny" (Metro)—Viola Dana and Gareth Hughes make great combination in appealing story. Good supporting cast. Better than average program picture.

"Lorne Doone" (Tournear)—Maurice Tournear's directorial art in the ascendancy. A rushing melodrama

"Loves of Pharaoh" (Paramount). Foreign film whose features are composed of gorgeous sets, magnificent photography and well handled mobs. Poor types used for principals. Heavy comedy. Title and director (Ernest Lubitsch) attract. amid scenes of great beauty. Fine attraction but public will have to be lured in.

"Lucky Carson" (Vitagraph)—Earle Williams' name draws, but deceives. Production is hopeless.

"Makin' Movies" (J. K. McDonald)—Best of the Johnny Jones kid comedies. The children stage "Uncle Tom's Cabin" with uproarious results.

"Manslaughter" (Paramount) — Good modern melodrama suffering from lack of logic and dragged in Roman bacchanalia. Nevertheless a money maker.

"Men of Zanzibar" (Fox)—William Russell, leaning heavily on cosmetics, plays up to insipid titles supposed to be daring. Illogical hokum.

"Missing Husbands" (Metro)—Another foreign flop. Sure cure for insomnia. Title misleading but may attract the curious.

"My Friend the Devil" (Fox)—Agony divided into three periods; a cure for insomnia. Weak box office picture.

"Nero" (Fox)—A historical decomposition that rambles while Rome burns. No value save the title.

"Nice People" (Paramount)—William deMille burlesques C.B.'s pictures by making a satirical sex picture. Name of play is known and will attract.

"Omar, the Tentmaker" (First National)—Guy Bates Post gives a splendid interpretation of Omar in a skipping story, further lifted by art work of the cameraman. Should draw big.

"On the High Seas" (Paramount)—Jack Holt and Dorothy Dalton in a popular semi-sea story, with a corking ship fire. Good attraction.

"One Clear Call" (Stahl)—John Stahl holds audience in the palm of his hand. Henry Walthall and Irene Rich give wonderful performance. Exploitation does not do picture justice.

"One Week of Love" (Selznick)—Selznick surprises the public with a successful production and Elaine Hammerstein. Lots of Conway Tearle and action. Good for most theaters.

"Our Leading Citizen" (Paramount)—Picture classes with "One Glorious Day." Tom Meighan scores heavily.

"Pink Gods" (Paramount)—Cynthia Stockley's novel upon the screen.

The production saved from mediocrity by James Kirkwood's acting. Fair for box office.

"Rags to Riches" (Warner Brothers)—Wesley Barry, a competent cast, good adaptation and modern director put it over despite its age. Any audience will like it.

"Reckless Youth" (Selznick). Elaine Hammerstein fails to save impossible story. Star's name will attract however.

"Rich Men's Wives" (Preferred)—An old story told in old way with too large cast. House Peters does not give best efforts. Others in cast are not handled to best advantage. Names in cast will attract but fans will be disappointed.

"Remembrance" (Goldwyn)—Written and produced by the famous Rupert Hughes. Story of long-suffering dad that wins despite lack of experience in producing. Good attraction.

"Robin Hood" (United Artists)—Douglas Fairbanks in a gorgeous production which should break all box-office records.

"Shackles of Gold" (Fox)—Production fails to get over because of overdone action, direction and impossible story. William Farnum reaches back-number stage, with old-school acting.

"Sherlock Brown" (Metro)—Bert Lytell in a slow moving triangle picture. The triangle being: the girl, the "papers" and the hero. Star's name is attraction.

"Sherlock Holmes"—Attractive screen presentation of the most popular fiction detective that ever lived, with John Barrymore as lead. Should make good money everywhere.

"Silver Wings" (Fox)—Loaded with sobbs, happiness, unhappiness, good direction and mediocre finish. A mixture which few will care for.

"Skin Deep" (Ince)—The kind of picture the screen needs badly. Entertainment values; skillful production; quality. Big if played up right.

"Sonny" (First National)—Simple heart interest story with Barthelmess playing "Sonny." Star's name will draw.

"Strange Idols" (Fox)—A triangle plot suffering in the writing and wrecked in the making. Dustin Farnum is star. Weak for the exhibitor.

"Tess of the Storm Country" (United)—Mary Pickford repeats the screen story with more kick in the production than formerly. Exhibitors must depend wholly upon the Pickford name.

"The Beauty Shop" (Cosmopolitan)—Raymond Hitchcock himself in his highly humorous stage play. Louise Fazenda gets most of the laughs. Fair for box office.

"The Big Scoop" (Pathe)—Another Johnny Jones-kiddie comedy above the average. Good filler.

"The Country Flapper"—Dorothy Gish disappoints her many admirers in a picture made weaker by poor subtitles. Title and star might put this over.

"The Cowboy and the Lady" (Paramount)—They really put this over with Mary Miles Minter actually doing fine work. Tom Moore helps a lot. Very good from box office standpoint.

"The Dust Flower" (Goldwyn)—Story will insult intelligence of average audience. Basil King, the author, depends upon his name for success of picture. Names of Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick will fill the theater.

"The Eternal Flame" (First National)—A Norma Talmadge costume drama so human and so well produced that it shames the average picture. A box office winner.

"The Eyes of the Mummy" (Paramount)—A good example of how ridiculous a picture can be and escape the shelf. Name of Pola Negri will entice her fans into seeing picture.

"The Fast Mail" (Fox)—A whiz-melodrama, that has most of them lashed to the starting post, with Buck Jones the hero. The kind that high brows ignore, but the multitude cheers.

"The Fatal Marriage" (Griffith re-issue). A seven-year-old film runs along with new productions without suffering greatly from the contrast.

"The Glorious Adventure" (Blackton)—Lady Diana Manners' long heralded screen appearance in a hopeless production. Box office value according to feminine patronage.

"The Gray Dawn" (Hampton)—A successful production without using modern equipment of story to make thrills. Title is only visible attraction but will please fans after viewing.

"The Infidel" (Preferred)—Katherine McDonald in serial hokum. Shipwrecked among the natives! They will laugh in the wrong place. Fair attraction because of star and liking for the wild stuff.

"The Kick Back" (F. B. O.)—Harry Carey in the kind of western thriller the children are forbidden to read. Good where Carey's name is drawing eard.

Why Writers Weep

Author Defends Industry, But Tells One Peeve

FATHER than be suspected of being an opponent of the movies, let me hasten to establish myself as an ardent advocate—sufficiently sincere to defend the industry whenever I hear any unwarranted attack thereon. And idiotic attacks are not infrequent. For instance, the other day I remarked on the pleasing expression of a certain man in the films. A prude answered me mysteriously with "Handsome is as handsome does."

"What do you know against him?" I asked. "Well, I never heard anything good about him. He's likely like all other screen actors."

"Who have you in mind? Name some of the reprobates."

"Oh, I don't pretend to keep up with all their histories."

"And yet I know of lots of good they do, among charitable institutions, etc."

"But those things are always exaggerated."

"Yes? Just the other day Miss _____ of one of the Hollywood film companies gave $500 to help a crippled child. The incident didn't even get into the newspapers. . . . None of us are perfect. Even ministers sometimes get into the limelight."

"But they are the exceptions."

"There are exceptions in all lines of endeavor."

"Movie people, though, are terrible."

"Name at least half-a-dozen of the monsters."

"Well, there's—let's see—um—ah—um—

Oh, I can't be explicit, because the awful things they do, no one hears about."

"Then in Heaven's name, how can you broadcast such slander!"

"Slander? Why, people who make their money so easily have no morals."

"They do not make their money—so easily. They work years before they get into 'electrics.' Such slander is sickening! You couldn't take such unfounded charges into a courtroom and sustain them."

"Why, you're no better than they are—defending them."

"Thanks!"

* * *

I'M certainly glad I'm "no better." I don't want to be good, if goodness implies a complacent smugness and narrow-minded bigotry.

Just the same, the movie industry has its faults—being human. And here's one—from the writer's viewpoint.

An anxious-to-win scenario writer sweats out a brace of scripts. Then, whether to submit—or not to is the question, since things sometimes happen to the precious manuscripts.

If one of the scripts is lost, there can be no hard feeling if the writer failed to use and enclose registry stamps. It may, or may not be, a significant fact that the percentage of ordinary mail that is lost is very, very low.

But take, say three other scripts: (1) one is returned badly torn and crumpled; (2) one is returned hopelessly soiled and thumbled; (3) one is returned after months with the comment that "only published stories are being used by that company."

In the first and second cases, a real hardship is worked on the hard-up beginner. A scenario that has 20 pages—to be re-typed at 20 cents a page, means a second outlay of $4.00.

In the third case, if a studio has adopted a policy of buying no original scenarios, it surely is not defensible to keep the submitted manuscript for months, or even until sent for. From three to six weeks seems a reasonable time for a manuscript to receive consideration. Longer might point to possible acceptance, but if at the end of eight or ten weeks you get it back with the intimation it has not even been considered, you don't just like it.

The question arises, whether ever again to submit anything.

But you do, however, for the very good reason, that the MAJORITY of the film companies show you every courtesy. Some of them are even kind enough to put registry stamps on what they return. Some include helpful comments. Some suggest other markets. I even suspect some of the "arrived" feel for us beginners in our blundering climb toward the "great goal."

It is only against the occasional exception, I register this peeve.

Six Months' Pictures in Critical Review

"The Kingdom Within" (Victor Shert-zinger)—Noted cast well handled. Play of "faith healer" type. Good moral value. Cast of favorites.

"The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" (Independent)—Will Rogers in this weird tale again scores, despite his departure from familiar themes. Atmosphere, action, hair-raising stuff, photography all there. The Rogers name is the exhibitors' key.

"The Masquerader" (First National)—Marvelous photography and double-exposure. One exposure is that of Guy Bates Post's poor screen presence. Fair box office attraction.

"The New Teacher" (Fox)—Shirley Mason in a pleasing feature, nothing more. Fair for the box office, despite weak title.

"The Old Homestead" (Paramount)—Familiar story presented with all the Lasky finish and, at times, vividness. But the spirituelle of the original is entirely missing. Fine for box offices, however.

"The Ordeal" (Paramount)—An ordeal for exhibitor and spectator. Noted cast might deceive fans into attending, but might keep them away from pictures for a long time after.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" (Metro)—Rex Ingram puts over a good program feature but not a special. It should clean up where costume pictures go.

"The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" (Ray Smallwood). Producer depends solely upon title to sell picture. Star inanimate and direction jerky. Photography is saving grace. Title great attraction to fans.

"The Sheik of Araby" (Hodkinson)—Title all there is to bank on. Actual production is not attractive enough to cope with trite subject.

"The Sin Flood" (Goldwyn)—From an audience standpoint a very good entertainment picture with a corking suspense situation. Richard Dix, Helene Chadwick and Jim Kirkwood are in it. Fine for exploitation.

"The Siren Call" (Paramount)—Dorothy Dalton and Yukon story may please. Direction jerky, continuity poor. Star does not give best efforts.

"The Storm" (Universal)—Reginald Barker shows what can be done with an old story and makes a spectacular picture much to the interest of Universal. House Peters' name will draw fans. Virginia Valli real star.

"The Tailor Made Man" (United Artists)—Star does not fit character but makes character fit Charles Ray. However Ray's best work. Title and star are great box office bets.

"The Vermillion Pencil" (F. B. O.)—Sessue Hayakawa in an uninteresting production. His former successes will carry this picture.

"The $5 Baby" (Metro)—A novelty plot with Viola Dana. Exhibitors should make money on this title and star's name alone.

"Trooper O'Neill" (Fox)—Buck Jones, as a northwest mounted policeman, goes "to get his man," in a production filled with beauty through the screen paintings of cameraman Lucien Androit. Fair attraction.

"Under Two Flags" (Universal)—A Priscilla Dean special replete with situations which have been used many times since the old play was written. Colorful and satisfactory. Good attraction where "popular"

"Wanted—A Story" (Pathe)—Another kid comedy with Johnny Jones. Needs a story. Fair filler.

"What Wrong With the Women?"—A big cast in absolutely nothing. No box office value.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" (Cosmopolitan)—Marion Davies surprises even her friends with a real histrionic performance in a highly spectacular production. Good attraction. Productions are demanded.

"While Satan Sleeps" (Paramount)—Peter B. Kyne story with 85 per cent entertainment value. Jack Holt will draw.

Script Market

Larry Semon wants stories of dramatic humor, with a touch of slapstick. Submit typewritten, double-spaced, to George E. Noble, scenario editor and general manager Larry Semon productions, Vitagraph studio, Hollywood, Cal.

Popular Pictures, Inc., are in the market for two-reel comedies for Hilliard (Fatty) Karr. Stories should be similar to the old Roscoe Arbuckle two-reelers. Company will also consider two-reel comedies starring Frankie Lee, child actor. Submit stories in synopsis form only to Ward Hayes, Federal studios, 3700 Temple St., Los Angeles.

Universal wants comedy-dramas laid about the life of the average American working girl for Gladys Walton to star in. The problems, temptations and triumphs of the girl wage earner offer a wide field for the screen writer. Submit action synopsis of 1500 to 2000 words to Hugh Hoffman, production supervisor, Universal City, Cal.

Universal wants light comedies with plenty of action for Herbert Rawlinson. Submit synopsis of 1500 or 2000 words to George Randolph Chester, production supervisor, Universal City, Cal.

Trying to Sell a Scenario

The Ruse by Which a Freelance Sold His First Screen Story

BY H. AUSTIN BECK

RECENTLY in an excellent magazine article, John Barrymore gave a very fine analysis of motion pictures—or rather to be more correct, photoplays—the point at issue being the moral value of the pictures produced today.

This article was, no doubt, prompted by the shop-worn, unanswered question: "What's wrong with the movies?"

Hungry for knowledge and information regarding this industry I, as do innumerable others, haunt the news stands each month, in the hope of running across some periodical which will give some real information on the subject.

But what do we find? If not a photoplay-school-subsidized magazine filled with articles informing the reader that the entire clientele of directors and producers are fairly beseiging the premises of photoplay schools in search of new talent and new material—and that the only channel through which the ambitious photodramatist may expect to "arrive," is the motion picture school—the easy path to the "$5000 for an idea" playground—then any of the other "Only reliable motion picture magazine published" whose articles invariably inform the reader that there is something wrong with the movies, and the further enlightening information that there is room in the movies for writers of a very different sort. And there you are—in exactly the same position as at the end of the previous month, without the desired knowledge, and without the several dollars regularly expended on your fruitless search.

* * *

If there are articles published which do picture the true state of affairs, I have been unable to find them. I mean articles which would really be informative to the struggling scenarist.

Recently, however, in Motion Picture Magazine, under the heading "Why Write Scenarios?" Ted LeBerthon very clearly defined the attitude of the better class studios toward the usually misguided would-be scenarist, and his exceedingly poor chances of success in that field via any channel other than through the magazines.

As matters stand at the present moment, there is little likelihood of the desired change as outlined by Mr. Barrymore ever taking place—the supplanting of present-day "rot" and "trash" with more imaginative material.

The writer has run the gauntlet of Hollywood studios, and has had the almost unbelievable and phenomenal good luck to have his first story (not scenario) accepted. If the reader will follow attentively in his footsteps, he may obtain that long-desired "close-up" of the studios and their scenario and reading departments—incidentally, not to be found in the usual monthly periodical.

In the first place, I am an ardent movie fan, and have been ever since the day of the "nickle flicker." So simple did many of the stories impress me as being, that I at once decided to "take a fling" at writing one. An experience of years ago promptly supplied the plot—hours of thought, its extension and elaboration—till finally the completed manuscript. Then came the first "bunker." One "answer editor" told me that I could not get a scenario copyrighted. Another said: "Copyright or no copyright, they could steal your idea if they wished—and probably would!" Gathering no enlightenment from this source, I wrote the copyright office, library of congress, at Washington, and received in return, a mass of printed matter, the gist of which was that: "unpublished material could not be copyrighted."

Armed with this literature, the affidavits which had been enclosed, and my manuscript, I sought out a printer. He was a very sympathetic soul, and apparently had heard the heart-rending tales of many a would-be scenarist, for he agreed to supply me with sixty printed copies of my MSS. at a very low figure.

Some days later I forwarded two of these copies already bearing the imprint, "Copyright 1922 by _____," the completed affidavit and $1 to Washington. In time I received an official notification of its protection and registration in my name.

* * *

And now to submit it.

Los Angeles, for some inexplicable reason, is the worst place in the country to seek any information regarding the movies. They either don't know, or if they do they are unwilling to tell you. Innumerable enquiries as to the proper method finally drove me to the classified section of the telephone book, where I selected the names and addresses of twenty of the most prominent studios. To these I forwarded a copy of my manuscript along with the customary self-addressed envelope. Visions of these talent-craving directors, scrambling over one another in an effort to read my MSS. rose before me, for hadn't I a real idea? But alas! Uncle Sam's trusty servant, the mail carrier, strode by my door with an unfaltering step. Eagerly I awaited his approach each day, in fact twice a day, but to no avail.

Then came a day, when spying my anxious countenance peering from the window, he hailed me. Aha! At last! Success for sure! In a moment I was into the street and at his side. Feverishly I tore open letter after letter. CHECKS? NO! My bugbear! The motion picture schools. They had found me—through the ever watchful studio office boy, who notes the ambitious scenarist's name and address from the upper left hand corner at ten cents per—and could they be of assistance to me? For a nominal fee of twenty dollars they would set me right. For who knows(?) but that I might be one of the screen's greatest—ASTRAY!

Then Dame Fortune smiled upon me, for by some stroke of good luck I met an assistant director. Aware of his probable reluctance to divulge the information which I desired, I employed strategy, what strategy I was able, finally eliciting the information that "You can't tell what the studios are liable to do. You'll just have to wait." A month passed, and then with almost diabolical regularity each day my mail box contained one of my own self addressed envelopes. As I drew forth the MSS. there fell upon the table, the studio's reply, and I read:

"We are returning herewith your manuscript UNREAD and beg to inform you that we do not purchase from outside sources."

Or:

"Herewith your manuscript. We are not in the market for stories, as we find that our own specially trained staff best supply us with our material."

Could it be true? Had I been misinformed? Had I not read for years that all the studios desired new material? Where were these $500 and $2000 checks the producers held in readiness for the New Idea? Worthy critics had told me that my story had merit. But in time the twenty copies of my story lay upon my table.

My visions of success blurred into dark clouds of despair. I was beaten. No! I would persist. I called upon my friend, the assistant director, related my woeful tale and showed him a copy of my story. A Perfecto persuaded him to read it. "A very good story" said he, and advised me to send it direct to Mr. So-and-So at the Such-and-Such studio. But hadn't I already sent it to that very studio? "Makes no difference. He never saw it anyway," he replied, and I hurried home to carry out his instructions forthwith.

Four days later a very courteous letter from Mr. So-and-So informed me that at the moment he was making pictures of a different sort, but that my story was good, and to send it to Mr. A at the B studio. I recalled that it had been to that studio already—but no matter!

Three days later, the telephone disturbed me from a reverie of shattered hopes. It was Mr. A speaking, and could I come out to the studio, as they were prepared to pay me—not $5000 but $150. A taxi-cab and $3 put me at the studio in as many minutes. The information desk girl, whose harsh voice a month previous had told me to "Mail it in" when I had sought to eliminate delay in the production of this great picture by submitting it in person, now graciously received me. Director A awaited me "on the lot," the sanctum sanctorum of the movies, that "end of the rainbow" where I was to get that real information for which I had sought and in vain scanned the magazines for years.

It was a rude awakening. And now Mr. Ambitious Scenarist, harken! My story was the first in FOUR months that had been purchased from an outside source, and almost the only one ever purchased from an unknown writer.

* * *

Reader, draw your chair a little closer and listen to what Mr. A has to say:

"My boy, you're lucky! At that your story was well presented (pamphlet form) and properly presented (short-story form). But give up the idea of writing 'originals' for the screen. Stick to fiction. Write and write and write until you get into the magazines. Then it comes easy. It's said that James Oliver Curwood received $50,000 for the motion picture rights on each of several of his books, and so did So-and-so and So-and-so. Get the idea, do you? If this story of yours had appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, $10,000 would be cheap for it. PUBLICITY IS PRICE. Keep that in mind. Six or seven million people see and read the Post each week. They see your story, read it, enjoy it. When screened as 'The Great _____' from the Saturday Evening Post story by _____ the bulk of these same six or seven million people go and see it."

How true all this is! How often do you, Reader, when sauntering about town, hesitate before a theater, read its announcement, pause, and then enter. Did you ever stop to think what it is that prompts that impulse to go inside? Well, if you haven't, it's that Saturday Evening Post touch, or your degree of familiarity with the writer. The star of course influences you, for well do you know that producers do not feature stars in unheard-of stories by unknown writers.

If you doubt this analysis—then why do you use a Rubberset shaving brush, a Gillette safety razor, Johnson and Johnson shaving cream, Kolynos tooth paste, and a prophylactic tooth brush? There are others equally as good. You do because they are the most advertised. The public today is weaned on publicity.

In Foreign Fields

(From Camera! Correspondent)

LONDON, Nov. 15.—The British film industry is not taking kindly to the American proposition of taxing all imported film entering the United States. Hints of retaliation are heard. The editor of one London trade journal has this to say on the subject

"The whole point of our argument is this: Will America give to British films as open competitive field as England gives the American film?"

"We disagree entirely with the policy of taxing American films. We stand for free trade, a fair field and open competition—and let merit tell.

"But we have to tell American friends that, with the alteration in government, it is quite conceivable that a tax may be put on American films. And the greatest argument that the tariff advocate would have is the fact that British films have not the open field that American films have here."

Anent of the above, frank confessions are heard in which it is admitted that British productions cannot be made upon the lavish plans of Yankee films, because the latter have circulation only in the limited British market.

Another authority frankly advocates the casting of at least one well known American star in each English production. He says that this will, in part, solve the American marketing problem.

ROYALTY ON LOCATION

Lady Diana Manners motored to Hampshire, Sunday, the rear seat of her motor filled with her Elizabethan library. She will live in a charming cottage on the edge of New Forest during the filming of her second picture. She is accompanied by her mother, the Duchess of Rutland, and her sister, Lady Violet Benson.

It is claimed that Kinchen Wood, since his return from scenario experience in a Hollywood studio, has written sixteen accepted scenarios in twelve months.

Andree Peyre, Pathe player and aviatrix who arrived in Paris recently from Los Angeles, is being sought by a British producer, who desires to feature her in several pictures.

Carlyle Blackwell is playing the role of Lord Robert Dudley to the Queen Elizabeth of Lady Diana Manners in "The Virgin Queen," now being made in Hampshire by J. Stuart Blackton.

It remained for an American film company to solve the fog problem. Fog, especially that which fills the stages of the film plants, has cost companies a mint of money in delays. It is said that the Paramount was backset $55,000 by fog alone, during the making of one production here. The corporation set scientists at work, and now an automatic system literally washes the air clean and introduces it to the Paramount plant dry, warm and clear. The system is a very complicated and costly one.

American producers have gone far back on old book shelves in order to secure picture stories, but England was awake this time. The Gaumont company has filmed "Rob Roy."

The Kino Moskwa, conducted under Soviet auspices, has opened a branch in Berlin.

The formation of a federation of film artists for the protection of their interests is brewing in London.

Louise Glaum, formerly of Los Angeles, has been featured in a Pathecolor film, entitled "Love." This will be the first drama to appear in Pathecolor.

Townspeople, including tradesmen, wives, daughters and sons played all the roles in a film which portrays the history of the ancient town of Glastonbury, Somerset, England. Kings, queens and other historical characters were filled from rank and file of everyday life there.

Flashes from Frisco

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 23—Kathryn Williams is here for a rest, and to replenish her wardrobe.

Walter Hiers was in San Francisco a few days this week.

A. H. Rockett has returned to Frisco from Sacramento on business connected with the Rockett production of "The Life of Lincoln."

Stanley Orr, publicity man for Belasco productions, left for Los Angeles last week.

Dan Mason and the "Plum Centerpedes" have started work on the tenth Plum Center comedy.

Frank Keenan opened at the Alcazar theatre on Sunday in the premier of "Peter Weston," a drama of today by Frank Dazey. Keenan is supported by Mary Newcomb.

Milton Sills spent the week end in town. He made a personal appearance at the Strand theater with the showing of "Skin Deep."

Fred Breden of Los Angeles is in town.

Gouverneur Morris was in San Francisco on business last week.

AGNES CRAWFORD

"Nanook of the North" (Pathe) and "Shadows" (Al Lichtman) are listed by the National Board of Review as the exceptional photoplays for November.

"Minnie" (Marshall Neilan) and "A Bill of Divorcement" (Associated Producers) are given extended mention.

Four Years Ago in Hollywood

(From Camera! of November 24, 1918)

Anita Stewart arrives Friday.
Fannie Ward leaves for New York.
David Warfield refused $600,000 to go into pictures.

Robert Harron recovers from his attack of influenza.

Jack Kerrigan has produced seven pictures in six months.

Charles Ray's latest Paramount feature is a baseball story.

Rose Mullaney joins Hamilton and Kern as registration lady.

Studio club girls inaugurate series of Sunday afternoon teas.

Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph, it is stated, will open a school for motion picture acting.

Frank Mayo will be seen with Mary McLaren in her next Universal picture.

Mrs. and Mrs. Earle Williams entertain Lillian Walker and Lew Cody at dinner.

Scott Sidney resumes production of Mutual-Strand comedies featuring Elinor Field.

Mabel Normand starts "Sis Hopkins" at Goldwyn under Clarence Badger's direction.

Maurice Tourneur arrives to produce independently at Goldwyn studio. Charles E. Whittaker, special writer, is with him.

Peggy Hyland arrives to work under Harry Millarde's direction at Fox.

Roscoe Arbuckle takes the studio opposite Mack Sennett and will make his comedies there.

Losanco Super-plays, Inc., will operate five companies. Lillian Hackett plays the lead in the first.

Murdock McQuarrie starts his own company at the old E. and R. Jungle Film company studio. Robert Doran is cameraman.

Bessie Barriscale starts her new picture at Brunton studio with Alfred Whitman as lead, Howard Hickman at the megaphone.

In the absence of William D. Taylor, who is in New Brunswick with the Canadian forces, Frank Beall is acting director of the Motion Picture Directors' Association.

Frank Lloyd, William Farnum's director, Scotty Dunlap, his assistant, and Bill Foster, cameraman, return from New York.

James S. Woodhouse, new Ince publicist, comes from Minneapolis, where he handled theater publicity.

Five dramatic companies and one comedy troupe start production at Universal. Tod Browning directs Priscilla Dean in "The Gutter Rose." Paul Powell directs Carmel Myers in "The Wild Girl." Ida May Park directs Mary MacLaren in "Whose Widow." Monroe Salisbury stars in "Pirate Gold" and Edith Roberts in "Cherries Are Ripe." Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are working in "You've Got It."

Exhausts

From Al Martin

George Archainbaud is making "Flesh" for Universal. Sort of a new-skin kind of picture, so to speak.

And now which comedy company will make "Yeast is Vest?"

Nell Craig flirted in Hobart Henley's production "The Flirt." 'Tis terrible, and who will save our little Nell?

Misprint on sign caused a packed theater. The sign read: To Have and to Hold Betty Compson for 25 cents."

William Worthington is president of the Hollywood Choral society. As a novelty William, to keep your actors happy, why not sing to them?

Muriel McCormick—or Nawanna Micor as she calls herself professionally—has made several scenes from "La Tosca." This should come under the heading of "When the Promoter Promotes."

Sid Smith has left the Hallroom Boys. This is the first time he has done so this week.

Lasky studio seems to be just a temporary parking place for some directors' megaphones these days.

Edward Peil is playing the heavy with Tom Mix in "The Hostage," which proves it doesn't pay to be good.

Between scenes of "Prince Rupert of Hentzau," I imagine Bryant Washburn saying, "When I was in vaudeville, etc." Never mind Bryant, your act was great, even if I did have to pay to see it.

Carlton King's latest with Martin Justice directing is "Detectin'." If you find anything Carlton, please advise.

Universal Film Manufacturing company has changed their name to Universal Pictures company. To remedy confusion, no doubt.

Wallace Worsley is directing "Nobody's Money." Funny title. Only time people really disown money is when a cop interrupts a crap game and asks, "Who's money is this?" Nobody speaks.

June Mathis Signs

June Mathis this week signed a contract as editorial director for Goldwyn Pictures corporation.

In so doing she is said to hold the highest office ever bestowed on a woman in the motion picture industry.

From her office at Metro studio June Mathis for years guided the destiny of that firm's scenario product. She translated "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "Blood and Sand" into the language of the motion camera.

For Goldwyn she is first picturizing "Ben Hur," for the production of which studio officials have boosted the financial limit a couple of millions.

Johnny Jones has returned from Big Bear with a big grouch. A game warden took his gun away from him while Johnny was hunting. The little comedian was told he was "too young" to handle a weapon.

Dorothy Chase in handling publicity for several film folk, including Marjorie Warfield, Doreen McClure of Famous Players-Lasky corporation, and Joseph B. Walker, cameraman. Miss Chase has had considerable experience in newspaper and magazine writing here and in the east. She recently returned to Hollywood from New York.

With the P. A.'s

The Butler (Pa.) Citizen suspended November 4.

The Miami (Fla.) Metropolis is running a 4-page roto Saturdays.

The Bronx (N. Y.) Home News began publishing daily on November 6.

The Huntsville (Ala.) News appeared the evening of October 31. It succeeds the Telegram, which went bankrupt.

Frances C. Boardman has resigned as drama writer of the St. Paul (Minn.) News.

The Seattle (Wash.) American is expected to appear December 1.

The Los Angeles Times publishes two separate drama pages that in the bulldog edition that goes on the street at 7 o'clock in the evening uses entirely different film news copy from that running through other editions.

Wages War via Screen

In keeping with her social service work in the southland, Angela C. Kaufman has launched production of an anti-narcotics film, called "The Greatest Menace" at Fine Arts studio. Mrs. Kaufman plans to present to the screen for the betterment of humanity, not for financial profit on her part.

"During many years I have worked among characters of the underworld no subject has been brought to my attention that I feel demands greater reason for combating than the dope evil, which is destroying the mentality and morality of thousands yearly," says Mrs. Kaufman.

"I believe that there is no better way for exposing this evil than through the medium of the screen."

Albert Rogell was selected by the noted Los Angeles social worker to direct "The Greatest Menace." It is planned to present the anti-narcotic message in attractive and sensational manner.

Adeline M. Alvord, the well-known story agent, has sold Jeffery Deprend's "The White Frontier," to the Allen Holubar productions, and may accept a literary research commission from that company to go to Montreal, the scene of the story, with the unit. She was engaged on similar work during the filming of Madame Nazimova's "The Red Lantern."

Enroute to Canada, Miss Alvord will make her annual call at New York for new material. Together with her associate, Elizabeth McQuillin, she has established a reputation for herself in the literary sales field, and several recent sales similar to the above attest to her ability.

Leah Baird put a scene in "When Civilization Failed," showing a shipwrecked kitten drifting about on a log. She wants to know if that is "hokum." It depends whether you are the kitten or not.

ACT OPENS WITH FILM

Jackie Saunders, who has just returned from a season on the Orpheum, in the east, will not return to the screen. Instead she will renew her work upon the Orpheum in a sketch, "Diana," written for her by Crane Wilbur. The act opens with a 400-foot screen picture, then continues as a stage production in two sets.

Exposition Premiere

THE most colorful, spectacular social event ever staged in history.

Only those who hold patron's certificates will be admitted to premiere.

A limited number of patron's certificates have been issued.

Patron's certificates are now available only to members of the motion picture industry.

To be certain of obtaining one you should act immediately.

Patron's certificates may be obtained in the following manner:

Studio employees can obtain certificates at studio publicity office.

Freelance players can obtain certificates at the Artists' Booking Exchange.

Extra talent can obtain certificates at the Service Bureau.

Exhibitors and exchange men can obtain certificates by wiring, writing or calling in person at exposition office, 1005 Hollingsworth building.

Be sure you're "among those present" when our exposition opens.

Gives Pan-American Viewpoint

By F. P. GAMBA,
Consul of Colombia.

IN writing this article, and principally when pointing out suggestions on the Monroe doctrine, I only express personal opinions without any official character; this explanation is necessary in the present case and readers ought to take note of it to avoid a misunderstanding.

The project of an exposition of the motion picture industry, taking place in Los Angeles, is doubtless fascinating. It calls for the attention of the entire world and shall meet with the most enthusiastic acclaim everywhere. For other part, such an exposition is something new, real new, and anxiously expected; a necessity also and a means for finding new paths and motives to increase the operating field of the industry.

Los Angeles, this wonderful metropolis of the southwest, grown in one day like the cities of fairyland, is no doubt the proper theater for an exhibit of this kind. All, in any measure, contributes here for the most resounding success—and certainly it shall be a very great one.

Now we come to another point. The magnificent project is planned to commemorate the proclamation of the Monroe doctrine, made a century ago—in December 1823—a national happening of unequivocal importance. The organizers of the scheme, however, are not willing to limit the reach of the celebration to the boundaries of the United States. They wish to give to this commemoration an international character. One question arises here: What amount of sympathy is to be found in the Spanish and Portuguese speaking peoples of America on account of the "doctrine of Monroe?" Will those peoples gladly join the United States to celebrate the proclamation made by President Monroe in December, 1823?

* * *

IF the famous "doctrine" is a way of saying: "America for the Americans," I am sure that not one of us would accept it, on account of the equivocal meaning of the name—"Americans" generally applied to the citizens of the United States, with the exclusion of the rest of the inhabitants of the American continent. But if the slogan is understood in the real meaning that it has, in the sense of Pan-Americanism, I do not doubt that we may join the United States in an international pageantry which contributes to enforce ties of solidarity in the new world—much more now when migratory movements of Asiatic elements toward our coasts are to be feared.

It is a question of decisive importance also, the manner in which the invitations are made to the governments of the Latin-American republics. In more than one case, in the diplomatic history of the world, a trifle has had more influence than big events on the development of historical processes.

For other part I think that now we have a good opportunity to arrive at a fair understanding of the Monroe doctrine. I should suggest the advantage of convoking a special Pan-American congress with this object. The Pan-American convention would add a very alluring proposition in this solemn occasion. If it is possible to formulate a slogan embodying the noble thoughts of President Monroe with international applicability, I am sure that all misunderstandings will disappear and the "doctrine" will become popular in the countries of Spanish America.

As soon as I was informed of the project I made report to the Colombian minister in Washington to receive instructions. If I hear anything of importance I gladly shall communicate, if not under reserve.

To end, I must manifest that I am very much obliged to the persons who have invited me for this collaboration, and also that I am ready to serve, in the sphere of my possibilities, the scheme of the exposition of the motion picture industries in Los Angeles. In the two years that I have been a resident of this wonderful city I have become her unreserved admirer, and I am sure also that there are not exaggerations in what is said about the future development and future importance of the city in which all conditions are reunited to become the largest metropolis in the world.

Scrap from W.E.W.'s Waste Basket

The kickup and fuss because one or two highly artistic pictures failed to bring home the whole hog, can have no effect in preventing the advancement in higher quality in production from those who look further than today and the box office. It is true that films are produced for the purpose of making money, but to declare that pictures which appeal only to Darwin's first humans should continue, is a pitiful argument. Artistry added to entertaining photoplays, is the one thing which has advanced the industry from the period of mediocrity, all walls from the sales forces to the contrary notwithstanding.

OFF TO SIERRAS

Allen Holubar and his company, including Dorothy Phillips, have left for the high Sierras which will be the locale for the outdoor scenes of "The White Frontier."

Cecil B. De Mille says:

"Personality is one absolutely essential quality for screen success. Without it beauty, brains and even ability count for nothing. Few stars are really beautiful, but they possess that subtle quality that attracts—a personal magnetism that instinctively claims attention and admiration."

There isn't a dozen stars in the whole profession possessing the personality of Peggy Marlowe. Also, she has the "beauty, brains and ability,"—being pretty, intelligent and talented. And yet she begs for recognition.

Will Hays with the Actor

The following (an extract from the Equity magazine of October, 1922) is a resume of the business trials and problems of the actor discussed by Will H. Hays at a meeting in Los Angeles with Jesse Lasky and a committee of the Actors' Equity Association.

It should be clearly understood that the conditions cited herein do not apply to every company and that there is nothing to complain of in many of the studios.

"Business Relationships of the Actor: An interview appointment with an actor should be considered as important a business engagement as any other. Producers, directors and casting directors oftentimes ignore a definite appointment or cause the actor to wait from thirty minutes to several hours.

"Office attaches, gateman and telephone operators often are guilty of such gross violations of common courtesy that a stranger to the industry would presume that they were carrying out a definite program of sarcasm and discouragement toward the artist.

"Needless habit of certain assistant directors in calling members of a company to be 'made up and ready' at 9 A. M. when they know that the actor cannot be called upon to work before late afternoon or the following day. Instances have been known of actors waiting in make-up for three full days because of this. The actor would appreciate greater discretion in this regard.

"Professional Relationships of the Actor: A great many artists appearing in pictures are former stage players with excellent reputations. It is humiliating to a well known actor of many years of successful achievement to find himself in the position of a supplicant before an uninformed and oft-times illiterate boy or man, in order to obtain a position. His experience, his ability and his versatility cannot possibly mean anything to such an employer, who judges the player's capabilities merely by his physical characteristics or his particular cut of clothing. These actors have shown enough confidence in the motion picture industry to forsake the stage and to locate permanently in Los Angeles in order to be ready at the call of the producer. They are entitled to dignified treatment as artists.

"The stars of our industry demand 'doubles' for physical chances, but the supporting player is expected 'to do anything he is told to do' or lose any further chance of employment with that particular director. Often 'surprises' are sprung by the director unknown to the actor, as for instance explosives discharged nearby without the actor's knowledge. 'Trick' scenes of this sort are favored by some directors to give what they imagine is realism to their pictures, as they have but little knowledge of the art of acting and deem such things necessary.

"At some studios it is impossible to obtain a dressing room key at all, as those in charge say that they are thoughtlessly carried away by players. Nevertheless in the case of property loss of wardrobe, etc., resulting from this the actor has recourse only to the courts. Wardrobe worth many hundreds of dollars is part of the actor's stock in trade and if stolen he sometimes finds it impossible to duplicate certain things.

"Financial Relationships of the Actor: Some companies disregard such matters as lunch and dinner hours. The evident intent is to hurry along the work and get through with the player in as short a time as possible and a few hours 'stolen' daily in this manner soon results in the loss of a day on the actor's salary. No actor objects to necessary night work if he is not called for a full day's work as well. But all naturally object to the strain of working day and night consecutively throughout a picture and to the curtailment of salary consequent to this custom. A day's work should be carefully defined throughout the industry.

"Contractual Relationships of the Actor: There has never been a contract for work given to the supporting players in this industry which is worthy of the name. One states that 'seven working days shall constitute a week' and that 'no remuneration is to be given for nights, Sundays or holidays, etc.' It is possible under this regime for the actor to do two or three weeks' work in one week. During that time he must work day and night if so ordered.

"If this sort of work is contemplated by the management they do not so notify the actor when engaging him. They endeavor first of all to obtain the very lowest salary quotation he will make under pressure. Sometimes this pressure involves the promise of another picture to follow up with right away. A promise that is seldom kept. Sometimes it involves a promise of 'featuring' his name. This is seldom kept.

"The starting date is often deliberately misrepresented in order to get the actor's promise to play the part.

"Actors are sometimes taken away to distant locations with salary not to begin until they are actually photographed and a visit of perhaps two weeks results in an engagement of one week or even less.

"It would appear that a week of 48 hours actual working time would be an ideal basis upon which to found an equitable contract. This is worth the considering.

* * *

"Agency Relationships of the Actor: That the honest agent in this industry fulfills an important mission there can be no doubt. Yet, in some cases the casting director has stated that he has been ordered by his firm to 'call' the actor for an interview through an agency to which he must pay a commission. In other cases an actor who has just finished a picture with a producer and who is being considered for another picture at the same studio will receive a 'call' from an agent, even though the actor has talked the matter over already with the producer or director or both. Sometimes two agents or even three (as has happened) will all 'inform' the actor of the engagement and all demand a commission. The compulsory agent and the grafting agent should be ruled out. The casting director should call players direct. But in the event of work with new employers it is quite possible that an honestly conducted agency should be permitted.

"Mr. Hays, undoubtedly, is deeply interested in the various problems of the actor, and stands for the betterment of our working conditions. The committee believes that he will find means to relieve many of the unpleasant features, as soon as it is possible for him to take the matter up."

Charles J. Van Enger, A. S. C., is chief photographer of "The Famous Mrs. Fair," the new Fred Niblo picture.

Little Buddy Messenger has an important role in "The Abyssal Brute," Jack London's story, which is being filmed as a starring vehicle for Reginald Denny.

Protean Arts announces that it will continue production of its series of single reel dramatic novelties at the Fine Arts studios. This company is filming stories in which every character is portrayed by Cecil Holland. Raymond Cannon is directing the series. Ernie Miller will continue to photograph. Fanchon Royer wrote the scenarios. "The Mind of Man," Protean Arts' first product, will be followed by a farce.

R. H. Nehls of the Angelus Pictures corporation is handling the distribution.

WOMAN'S MAGAZINE PRODUCES

The Woman's Home Companion will sponsor a series of two-reelers taken from articles appearing in the magazine, dealing chiefly with American home life. The Aralma Film Company, Inc., is producing these films at the Estee studio New York. They will be released through Alexander Film corporation.

Actress Refuses to Play

Declaring the role she was cast for "is degrading and suggestive," Priscilla Dean refused to report at Universal City Monday to start production of "Drifting," under Tod Browning's direction.

Controversy has waged between Miss Dean and Universal Film company over the part of Cassie of the yellow seas. With the actress's refusal to obey the set call, the matter passes to conferences between opposing lawyers.

Inclination of photoplay spectators to invest the player with the character portrayed is given by Miss Dean as her reason for refusing to play in "Drifting."

Universal contends the character is not as immoral as some she has played, and that Miss Dean read and approved the play three months ago.

The controversy promises to provide juicy material for sensational sermons and for censorship advocates who lately have run out of fodder.

Harry Lamont played an important bit in Pola Negri's first American picture, "Bella Donna," at Lasky's. He is now playing Sir Guy of Gisbourne in "Robin Hood, Jr.," starring Frankie Lee at Federal studio.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Jack Gilbert is visiting in New York.

John M. Stahl is in New York for a month, combining business and pleasure.

Thomas Meighan and his director, Al Green, have returned from Pittsburg, where they filmed scenes in the oil fields for "Back Home and Broke."

Marilyn Miller will not undergo an operation. Doctors decided she is suffering acute nervous trouble and not from appendicitis. She left the cast of "Sally" last week in Philadelphia and was rushed to the Ritz, where Jack Pickford and Mary and Doug could keep a watchful eye on her.

Irene Castle was rehearsing at the Central theater preparatory to her personal appearance there next week when a stranger walked up to her and said, "I am the world's greatest press agent. For $500 a week I'm at your service." He spread out a stock of newspapers, pointed to the headlines and said "See! I'm Lloyd George's press agent!" Miss Castle humored the fellow till the wagon came.

The greatest social function of the theatrical season was given at the Hotel Astor by the Actors' Equity association. Hazzard Short directed the "Midnight Jollies" and arranged the pageant.

RAYMOND McKEE.

It is the realization of this, and its acceptance of it as a fact, that will afford the screen aspirant the greatest stimulus in his work—which of necessity must be—to invade the fiction field, the stepping stone to the motion picture field, regardless of the trials, tribulations, and disappointments, which it will undoubtedly entail.

It is a question how this "era of more imaginative stories" so earnestly desired by the public, and so clearly outlined by Mr. Barrymore, will come about. Perhaps the many screen aspirants will realize that there is no royal road to success, and head off in the right direction—or will the studios buy stories instead of publicity?

"The Covered Wagon"

is on the way!

Out in the American desert, the Paramount company under the direction of James Cruze is now engaged on the most gigantic motion picture undertaking ever attempted. This is the picturization of "The Covered Wagon," by Emerson Hough, which will in every way be epoch-making. The scenario is by Jack Cunningham; photography by Karl Brod

The following letter, from a man who spent two days on location with the company, gives some idea of the magnitude of this undertaking:

"I saw things which I scarcely believed possible to be set up in a desert; a wagon train two miles long; a thousand people, including two hundred and fifty Indians; a camp of over two hundred tents; a complete electric lighting system; a commissary department as efficient as a hotel.

"I saw some night stuff taken which gave me more thrill than anything I have seen in the motion picture business.

"There will never be another picture like this. No one else would go to the expense of $12,000 a day for two or three months to make it.

"The company is ninety miles from the railroad, and we had to travel over the worst roads I ever saw to get there. The temperature at night is about 3 above zero, but nobody complains. They're all so enthusiastic about 'The Covered Wagon' that they'll undergo anything to have it right."

One declaration of independence

THE débâcle of the meddlers.

That's what is happening in the big "machines"—as the factory-like studios where motion pictures are "manufactured" are termed.

"I wouldn't direct another program picture for any of them," said one new independent, who heretofore has served as director and supervising director for big studio producing organizations.

"If the picture I make with my own money by myself is at least as good as the pictures I've made for the machines with their money, the machines are done!"

"The machines are too wasteful in their methods.

"They have too elaborate a system of meddling with the individual director. 'To protect their product,' they call it.

"It costs money for rush-viewers, for editors, for supervisors of various kinds. And these potentates are in perpetual battle. They are jealous of each other. And they are suspicious of any director who tries to do without them.

"The individual director has to work under the invisible barrage laid by opposing guns between the front of the lot and the production group.

"The director further has to contend with the jealousy of established 'star' directors who fear too proficient competition.

"Politics in choosing and purchasing a story, politics in hiring a director and in guiding his work, politics in working over the film afterward to bring it to a level standard of merit will prove fatal to the system.

"It's not that I'm more parsimonious in spending my own money—I'm not. I spend my money as lavishly as if it were Mr. Magnate's. I realize that it costs me $100 every time I change the camera set-up. I realize that I am taking ten days to make an episode scheduled for four days. But I don't worry, and if I'm tired I quit in the middle of the afternoon.

"I've spent my own money on a cast that's the best I ever worked with. I know that the results I'm getting compare very favorably with the best I've ever done. I know there's no danger of a meddler stepping in and emasculating my work—re-editing it, writing new titles, anything to meddle.

"I'm not helping pay the salary of any such meddlers. So I'm happy."

Congratulations, Goldwyn!

Goldwyn Pictures corporation is to be congratulated.

With June Mathis as editorial director, and with screen rights to "Ben Hur" and "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," that company occupies an enviable position in motion pictures.

If Miss Mathis is given a free rein in her field, she will do for Goldwyn what she did for Metro with "The Four Horsemen" and for Lasky with "Blood and Sand."

Noblesse oblige

A few weeks ago E. F. Albee, head of the Keith vaudeville circuit, issued a request to all his theaters and artists to discontinue making gibes at Hollywood and motion picture people.

The Associated Press carried 50 words on it, the colyum conductors made a few wise cracks, and one or two amusement papers commented editorially.

Then everyone forgot about it—except Keith managers and Keith actors.

* * *

Albee's request and the compliance with it by the men and women of the two-a-day reflects great credit on the profession of vaudeville.

Variety, esteemed contemporary in the field of the stage, says "the show business is the show business all over the world wherever there is a box office."

Right.

Now the vaudeville branch of the show business has extended a professional courtesy to the motion picture business.

Let's reciprocate.

Many films, especially comedies, cast uncalled-for slurs upon their sister entertainment, the stage.

The dissolute producer, the ridiculous, strutting tragedian, the haughty leading woman with her eternal after-theater party—they're just a few instances of the stock-in-trade caricatures in the film studios.

Why not respect the people of the stage, even as they are respecting the people of the films?

Let's go 50-50 with the stage in courtesy.

TED TAYLOR.

Film Capital Production Notes

Mal St. Clair has started production at Powers studio on "The Knight in Gale," adaptation of the second of the "Fighting Blood" short stories by H. C. Witwer. George O'Hara is featured, with Clara Horton in the leading feminine role.

"Detective K-nine" will be the next picture of Brownie, the Century dog star. Harry Edwards will direct. Edwards wrote it in collaboration with Sig Neufeld.

James B. Leong has organized his own company to produce "The Unbroken Promise," an original story by Leong.

Jack Mulhall has been engaged to play lead to Norma Talmadge's role in her next picture, "Within the Law." Frank Lloyd will direct and Frances Marion has completed the scenario. Shooting will commence as soon as Miss Talmadge arrives.

Raymond Hatton has been engaged at Universal City to portray Gringoire in the Universal film, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Wallace Worsley is supervising preparations. The scenario was written by Perley Poore Sheehan and E. T. Lowe, Jr.

MAX GRAF PREPARING

Max Graf has taken headquarters at Metro studio and is preparing to film his next three pictures, which will be made at San Mateo studio.

"The Fog," a story by William Dudley Pelley, will be Graf's next production. Actual filming will start within the next four weeks. H. H. Van Loan is preparing the screen adaptation. Following this, "Beans," an original story by Graf and Van Loan is to be filmed. The third production will be "The Gamble in Souls," another original by Graf and Van Loan.

Irving Cummings will spend nine months to complete "The Last Days of Pompeii," for Principal Pictures.

"Grandma's Girl" will be held up indefinitely due to the illness of Alf Goulding. In its stead "The Flower Girl" will go into production under direction of Herman C. Raymaker. Baby Peggy will be the star.

"The Ten Commandments" has been chosen as the title of Cecil B. DeMille's next Paramount picture to follow "Adam's Rib." "The Ten Commandments" was awarded first prize in DeMille's nation-wide contest for a new idea, which brought 30,000 entrants. Eight different people named the ten commandments. Although the rules called for but one first prize of $1,000, DeMille and executives of Paramount gave $1,000 to each of the seven others.

Paramount's next for Pola Negri will be an original by Frances Marion, tentatively titled "The Song in the Dark." Penrhyn Stanlaws will direct.

LLOYD TO PICTURIZE WRIGHT NOVEL

Frank Lloyd will scenarize and probably direct "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent," by Harold Bell Wright, for Principal Pictures corporation. It will be the first of nine of Wright's novels to be produced. According to Sol Lesser $250,000 will be spent on each one.

DON'T BE BASHFUL

Goldwyn Pictures corporation invites the public to pick the cast for "Ben Hur." Each man is asked to consider what heroic figure of the screen would be suitable in the part of "Ben Hur"; or Messals, the villain; the gentle Esther, or the "vampish" Iras. The selection of the ideal cast should be sent to Robert B. McIntyre, casting director at Goldwyn studio.

Mary Alden has the star role in "This Wife Business," first of the series sponsored by Woman's Home Companion, now being produced by Aralma Film Co., for release through Alexander Film Corp. Arthur J. Zellner is directing.

The Schenck productions will move to the Metro lot upon the return of Norma and Constance Talmadge, Joseph Schenck, Buster Keaton from Europe.

E. Lloyd Sheldon for "The Law of the Lawless," story by Konrad Bercovici to be made by Paramount, starring Dorothy Dalton.

Beatrice Van, for "The Knight in Gale," an adaptation of the second series of the "Fighting Blood" stories by H. C. Witwer.

Perley Poore Sheehan is preparing continuity for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" from Victor Hugo's famous novel. He will supervise the entire production from writing to cutting. Sheehan is also preparing an original and continuity for Guy Bates Post. The title will be announced later.

Title Changes

"A Dollar Down" to "Modern Matrimony," Selznick production featuring Owen Moore and Alice Lake.

"The Rear Car," Edward Rose's mystery drama, to "Red Lights." To be directed by Marshall Neilan for Goldwyn.

"The Fire Eater" to "The Smoke Eater," Phil Goldstone production.

Complete

"Robinhood, Jr.," starring Frankie Lee. Directed by Clarence Bricker, photographed by Vernon Walker for Popular Pictures at Federal studio.

Al St. John, Fox comedian, has completed the fourth of a series of laugh creations. The previous three releases are titled "All Wet," "The City Chap," and "Out of Place."

Bob O'Connor and Eddie Boland have finished their first two pictures for O'Connor productions and are beginning their third. They have named the two "When Knight-hood Was in Flour" and "Something About Nothing." Grover Jones wrote and directed both.

Billy Franey has completed six two-reel comedies for O'Connor productions.

Vitagraph Sues Lasky

Charging a conspiracy to control the motion picture industry in the United States, Vitagraph filed suit for $6,000,000 in the U. S. district court in New York against the Famous Players-Lasky corporation Tuesday.

Individuals named as defendants in the suit include Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Jules Bruletour, Daniel Frohman and Cecil DeMille.

Vitagraph alleges that since 1919 the defendants, have interfered with the business of competing producers and distributors, and established control that has cost the plaintiff $2,000,000.

The action was begun under the section of the Sherman or "anti-trust" law, which provides for assessment of triple damages when interstate commerce has been found to have been impeded.

The control of first-run theaters in key cities is given in the Vitagraph suit as the means of the alleged control, which, Vitagraph contends, caused its profits to decrease from an average of $750,000 a year to $108,490 in 1921. Vitagraph's capital is put at $2,176,000.

Society Sidelights

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil B. DeMille entertained last week at their Laughlin Park home in honor of delegates to the tenth annual convention of the Paramount department of distribution. Guests included notable representatives of the film industry. Assisting Mr. and Mrs. DeMille in the reception of guests were Mr. and Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky, Adolph Zukor and S. R. Kent.

Edward Bowes, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures corporation, gave a dinner party Friday evening at the Ambassador in honor of Eric von Stroheim, who has just signed a long term contract as director for Goldwyn. Among the guests were many persons prominent in the profession.

Perley Poore Sheehan, author of a number of big sellers and screen stories, discussed "The Novel" last Tuesday for the Southern California Woman's Press Club at the Ebelle Club.

The guests of honor included Mmes. Rob Wagner, Perley Poore Sheehan, Ida McGlone Gibson, who also spoke briefly; Ella Buchanan, Marah Ellis Ryan, Beulah Marie Dix, Mr. and Mrs. Kline and Mrs. W. E. Mabey.

Maurice Tourneur, Anna Q. Nilsson and Milton Sills held a party at United studios Monday night when the first scenes of the "Isle of Dead Ships" were filmed. Members of the cast presented the directors with a box of cigarettes as a token of good will. Scott R. Beal is assistant director and Milton Menasco, art director.

Ruth Virginia Louiso and George Gelpi, motion picture actor, were married last week by Justice of the Peace J. Walter Hanby in his offices in the courthouse. Gelpi, a native of France, is known to screen fans as George Milo.

R. D. Saunders is recovering from an attack of pneumonia and will be back in the field in a few days.

HERE'S POTEL'S NUMBER

No telephone number was given in Victor Potel's advertisement in Camera!'s exposition number. The elongated comedian can be reached via voice by calling Hollywood 2884, or via person by calling at 5742 Virginia avenue.

Independent Producers to Co-operate

First steps are under way to incorporate a protective and semi-cooperative association of independent motion picture producers.

The idea of the organization was initiated Tuesday and met with instant favor among five independents.

Charles Seeling, Jess Robbins, Chester Bennett, Halperin Productions and Al Rogell were the first to pledge themselves to the organization.

Invitations were issued to five more west coast independent producers, and preliminary meetings have been held daily.

United Producers is the tentative title of the new organization. Capitalization of $500,000 is planned.

The organization will probably be cooperative to the extent of purchasing supplies and operating a studio.

Churches Must Obtain Police Permits

Los Angeles churches must now obtain police permits, or preachers and members of congregations will be liable to a fine of $500 or a sentence of six months in jail.

Ministers discovered Tuesday that an ordinance aimed to regulate social clubs, and passed by city council at the urging of church organizations, affected churches as well.

The ordinance defines "social club" as "an association of persons for the promotion of sports, athletics, literature, science, politics, good fellowship, charity, religion, moral or social ethics, citizenship, benevolence or other common objects."

It is expected that church representatives will now take action to have the ordinance repealed.

SUMMON FILM PROMOTER

Francis Engel, to whom Camera! readers were introduced October 7 as president of Scripture Films, Inc., Wednesday appeared before Deputy Labor Commissioner Barker. He was required to present his books to show how much stock in Scripture Films, Inc., he has sold to "Christian people wishing to work in motion pictures"—as he formerly advertised in Los Angeles newspapers. He was also made to reveal the number of memberships—at a sliding scale of fees—he had enrolled in the "Children's Motion Picture Association" in 921 Loew's State theater building.

R. B. Wilson, who taught make-up and acting at the "film exchange" in the Knickerbocker building on Olive street, and who signed Scripture Films contracts before they were valid, also appeared.

PLAN "JOY WEEK"

Julius and Abe Stern, officials of Century comedies, have set aside, in co-operation with the Universal Film company, the week of December 24, to be known nationally as Universal Joy week. A concerted drive in Southern California territory will be inaugurated by Universal film exchanges.

Arthur Rankin sustained a wrenched knee and was severely bruised in a fist fight he staged before the camera with George O'Hara for "The Knight in Gale," H. C. Witwer's second of a series of "Fighting Blood" stories which Mal St. Clair is producing at Powers studio.

Flashes From Frisco

San Francisco, Nov. 30, 1922

To protect the public from fake motion picture companies and schools, representatives of nine production corporations have formed the San Francisco Motion Picture Producers' association. The organization meeting was held Wednesday in the office of West Coast Films. The new association will work for the betterment of the picture industry in Northern California.

Harry C. Norfleet spent part of last week in San Francisco.

Edwin H. Flagg, of Flagg studios, Los Angeles, spent last week here on business.

A. S. Le Vino, scenario writer from Hollywood, is spending the week end in San Francisco.

Ouida Bergere is in San Francisco at work on the scenario for Pola Negri's next picture, an adaptation of "The Rustle of Silk," a novel.

Creighton Hale and others have attached the property of the Utility Films production corporation for unpaid salaries due them for work in "Simple Simon Simpkins" and "Silly Husbands."

Leon Schwartz, motion picture magnate of Soerabala, Java, is visiting San Francisco on a world tour. He is inspecting picture houses to secure ideas which he will incorporate in Java showhouses.

Zero and Artic, a team of trained Alaska huskies valued at $3,000, were brought south by an old Alaskan prospector and trapper and will be sent to Hollywood to be used in "Baldy of Nome," soon to be filmed.

Memorial services for Frank Bacon were held at the Alcazar theater at noon last Wednesday. Prominent men and women gathered to pay a last tribute to the memory of one of California's most famous, and best loved sons.

Gouverneur Morris, author, has petitioned the United States district court for an injunction against the United Artists corporation, and the Distinctive productions, incorporated, to restrain them from further production "The Man Who Played God." Morris claims the scenario was made without his permission and that the defendants have made large profits through the infringement of his copyright, by showing of the picture.

AGNES KERR CRAWFORD.

Where to Find People You Know

Frances Marion has been added to the Goldwyn fold. Marshall Neilan, producing in association with that company, has placed her under contract to write sub-titles for "The Strangers' Banquet," his picturization of Donn Byrne's novel.

Captain Patrick B. Cullinan, late of the English army, is appearing in comedy roles for Century.

George Meehan, who had a finger in the making of "A Tailor Made Man," is responsible for the photography of "When Boyhood Was in Flower."

Robert Mack is playing Sir Pitt Cranley in "Vanity Fair" at Ince studio.

Marshall Ruth has been engaged to do the heavy opposite Eddie Boland and Bob O'Connor for their new series of two-reel comedies.

Lincoln Stedman is working with Herbert Rawlinson at Universal, in a screen version of George Barr McCutcheon's novel, "Castle Cranecrow."

Eva Novak has returned to Lasky studio to play feminine lead opposite Jack Holt.

Myrtle Stedman has returned from Santa Barbara, where exterior scenes for "The Famous Mrs. Fair" were made.

Baby Peggy is to appear as an artist's model in her next. She will pose as Mary Pickford, Mae Murray and Gloria Swanson. H. C. Raymaker will direct. The story is the joint effort of Raymaker and J. Travers Montgomery, who acts as co-director in piloting his daughter.

Jack Holt has been working almost entirely on location thus far, in "The Tiger's Claw."

Huntly Gordon, who was brought out from New York for one of the leading roles in the Fred Niblo production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," has cancelled his return trip east with a view of making Los Angeles his winter home.

Shorty Callaghan will play a clown in Jackie Coogan's next picture. He comes back to Hollywood after a summer with Ringling, Barnum & Bailey's circus.

Charlotte Woods, formerly with Charles Ray company, is playing in "The Boom-crang" at the Morosco theatre.

Carmel Myers has returned from location, where she played opposite Bill Russell, in "McFee's Sensational Rest."

Henry Murdock, who has been playing in Christie pictures for two years, will be seen opposite Dorothy Devore in "Hazel From Hollywood," and will then be featured himself.

Mother Ashton has returned from Hawaii, where she made "The White Flower" with Betty Compson.

Doris Stone, English musical comedy star, is playing at Goldwyn in "Vanity Fair."

Edward Kimball, Clara Kimball Young's father, will appear in the part of Papa Bonelli in "The Woman of Bronze."

William McConnell will photograph "The Woman of Bronze." Joseph Wright is art director.

Harry Meyers, working in the Rapf production of "Brass," which Sidney Franklin is directing, is the latest addition to the cast of "Main Street."

Carmel Myers is such a popular actress that we never know who will be the next director to claim her talents.

Evelyn Brent, who has been playing in foreign pictures for the last four years, has come west to support Douglas Fairbanks. She has signed a two-year contract.

Edward Knoblock, scenario writer, has been added to the Pickford-Fairbanks staff and will assist in both forthcoming productions.

Geary O'Dell has been engaged to play the villain in Fatty Karr comedies.

G. M. Anderson, after a visit in New York, has returned to the Fine Arts studio where he will commence production on a two-reel comedy with Stan Laurel.

Charles Seeling is back at Fine Arts studio, where filming of his next story will start in two weeks.

Claire Windsor has been cast by Myron Selznick for one of the principal roles in "Rupert of Hentzau," now in the making at the United Studios under the direction of Victor Heerman.

Harry Beaumont will direct "Main Street" for Warner Brothers. Production will start in about four weeks.

Scott Darling is directing "Black and White," with Lewis Sargent and Eileen Burdette.

Edwin Stevens will play the father of the sculptor's model in "The Woman of Bronze," starring Clara Kimball Young.

Pat Harman is playing the monk in George Archainbaud's production "Flesh."

George Williams, playing Ferdie in the Hallroom Boys comedies, is working in his twelfth picture of the series.

Vernon Dent signed with Richard Jones to play in "Alice in Screenland," Phyllis Haver's first starring production.

Dick Sutherland is with C. B. DeMille in "Adam's Rib."

Jean Havez will write exclusively for the Hallroom Boys.

Jack Holbrook has been cast for the next Johnnie Walker production.

Claire Windsor has been added to the cast of "Bella Donna," Pola Negri's first American-made starring picture.

Enid Bennett is to have the role of Priscilla in Charles Ray's production of "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

Harry Keaton is filling an engagement at Metro in "Rob 'Em Good," featuring Bull Montana.

Clark Thomas, business manager at the Thos. H. Ince studios, will be associated with Frank E. Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan in the newly formed Allied Authors, Inc.

Marguerite Clayton appears opposite Harry Carey in "Canyon of the Fools."

Charlie Chaplin has engaged Monte Bell to assist in his next picture.

Production of "The Smoke Eater" was delayed two days when Frederick Kohler, the heavy, was overcome by smoke.

Margaret Leahy, the English beauty, who was selected out of 80,000 entries as the winner of a contest conducted by the London Daily Sketch, to come to America under Norma Talmadge's tutelage, will play Aggie in "Within the Law."

Leo White is cast for a part in "Vanity Fair" at Goldwyn.

Otto Lederer is filling an engagement in "Vanity Fair" under direction of Hugo Ballin.

Glen MacWilliams and Jules Cronjager have been assigned as cameramen to Myron Selznick for "Rupert of Hentzau."

Current Reviews

"His Wife's Relations"

IT always has been our firm conviction that, for laughs, "One Week!" was the greatest knockout ever seen upon the screen. Buster Keaton gave it to us, but he now has performed the miracle of tying the score with his new one, "His Wife's Relations."

Keaton and Eddie Cline have given us a plot with lots of human stuff in it, something we always have contended could and should be done in the creation of humorous filmplays of true worth.

If you can imagine Buster, wildly seeking a hiding place, rushing into a Polish Hall of Justice where he meets Kate Price and, in the confusion, being married to that corpulent Irish lady unknowingly, you will begin to get a peep at the possibilities of this rib-buster. Then, when the bewildered but unwilling husband is dragged home to shantytown by the delighted wife, to encounter the pick-and-shovel paddies of her household, you will get a wider angle of the hilarious doings.

There is a succession of laughs in this comedy which will keep you gasping. It would be unfair to reveal further the delights of this genuine comedy, beside which the average film attempt is a puny thing indeed.

"The Man Who Saw Tomorrow"

THOMAS MEIGHAN is getting to be a name well worth announcing, and all? star Lasky casts, when they include such names as Leatrice Joy, June Elvidge and Theodore Roberts, should mean something to the patron who searches the billboards for something to witness.

But the somewhat peculiar idea upon which "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" is based did not go over the first time it was tried by Vitagraph, and it doesn't score much of a success this time. The odd situation is developed very well but, when Meighan begins to see "tomorrow" and to witness things yet to come, the production does not speed up to fullest extent in action or excited interest, as one would expect.

And the conclusion is solely in the mind of the patron, after he leaves the theater. The full argument may occur to him as to what the leading man's final choice meant—that, despite the mystic threat of death, he chooses the woman he loves.

Somehow or other the production missed entirely in tempo, in that gradual upbuild. It never reaches a decisive and absorbing climax. The conclusion is entirely too tame, and we all fail to get the thrill we expect and would enjoy.

Besides the very competent artists named above, the cast is well augmented by Albert Roscoe, effective heavy; Eva Novak, seen at her best; Lawrence Wheat, John Milner, Robert Brower, Edward Patrick and Jacqueline Dyris, who have less to do.

Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Condon wrote the story. It was adapted by William Ritchey and Frank Condon. Alfred Green directed.

The photography was very effective, especially in the Southern island scenes.

"Brothers Under Their Skin"

INSTEAD of dealing with the colonels' lady we see the problems of old man O'Grady himself in "Brothers Under Their Skins." And the story is so human that, funny as it looks, it is tragically true. The action of the story begins where most stories end. Then history repeats itself and the caveman wins out.

Peter B. Kyne wrote the original story, telling many married life trials and tribulations—and, finally, its joys.

E. Mason Hopper directed. He got good results in linking up the cast with the story.

Particularly well cast are Helene Chadwick and Pat O'Malley. Their roles are the least attractive and best acted of the picture.

Pat O'Malley is given the best role of his career and does his best work as the $30-a-week clerk. He is funny in his apparent endeavor to be serious.

Helene Chadwick as the clerk's wife gives another splendid performance. This role is quite different from any other that she has played. She proved her versatility by filling the character's shoes in a satisfying way.

Norman Kerry, moneyed husband, plays a straight part in a clean-cut, interesting manner.

Mae Busch, as the Harlem-flat vamp, makes trouble charmingly.

Claire Windsor is a splendid type for the pampered wife of the high salaried husband, although her work might have been a bit more steady. She wears beautiful clothes and looks like a million-dollar girl.

Photography is very good.

This picture will appeal to the young married people and give the old ones a laugh. The entertainment value is good even though the story does not go very deep.

"Stung"

THE latest of the J. K. McDonald kid comedies with Johnny Jones is titled "Stung." However, that applies only to a member of the cast and not to any man, woman or child that might see this concentrated lot of joy. Mason Litson wrote the continuity and directed the kiddies through the rollicking comedy, and the many gags injected place this comedy among the best.

While it is a picture about children and for them, the adults will enjoy it too.

Johnny Jones, always the genteel boy and brains of the gang, unravels the grown folks' troubles and winds up the winner.

Gertrude Messinger, the very young ingenue, never disappoints us, but her performance here is better than usual.

A marked addition to the famous kiddies cast is Gordon Griffith. The surprising incident is that he plays the juvenile lead. And he plays the young man as well as his past child interpretations.

Kenneth Green is there too. No McDonald production would be complete without this fat boy comedian. He accomplished many laughs through the gags he pulls.

Benny Alexander, another of the plotters, gives a splendid performance.

Photography by Ray June is far above the average. Exteriors are beautiful.

What Folks Think

ASSISTANTS THANK CAMERA!

HOLLYWOOD, Nov. 24.—Editor Camera!—The Assistant Directors Association of California wish to sincerely thank you and your editorial staff for publishing President Burns' statement of facts concerning our relations with our tenant, the Fashion Film company. We wish to go on record through your columns as being opposed to "make-up" schools. This stand on their part has not been made through newspapers but has been in their by-laws since the inception and granting of charter to this organization by the state of California in 1918.

Again acknowledging your generous help in rectifying a growing error in the minds of your reading public, we remain,

ASSISTANT DIRECTORS ASSOCIATION,

By Harry Tenbrook,
Recording Secretary.

WRONG ABOUT THE CHARTER

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 21.—Editor Camera!—In reference to Camera!

Catherine Calvert is coming to Hollywood.

Norbert Lusk is the new publicity manufacturer at Goldwyn's.

Bobby Vernon has been promoted to messenger at Fort MacArthur.

Eugene O'Brien is on his way to Hollywood. He signed a long-term contract with Lasky.

dated October 14, 1922, I wish to state that your reporter had been misinformed about Screenland Film corporation, there being no such corporation formed by us. You also stated in Camera! that the charter has been in Sacramento for two months and still is there, this statement also being wrong.

Now we are organizing the Hercules Film corporation, consisting of Jack Pollo, Mike Charles, John Charles, William Waltherin, and Pete Andrews; John Dennison being our attorney.

Four Years Ago in Hollywood

(From Camera! of December 1, 1918)

"It" appears on news-stands as successor to Photoplay Art, with Miles Overholt as editor.

Elinor Fair was in Santa Monica during the earthquake last week, and was quite shaken up about it.

Teddy, the dog working with Billie Rhodes in "The Springtime of Youth," visited the dentist last week.

Pat Moore is playing the child of Louise Glaum and Matt Moore in "The Stairway to the Skies" at Ince.

We sent for our charter September 5, and it was issued to us about three weeks later. We have incorporated for $50,000, and we are going to produce a series of two-reel athletic outdoor stunt pictures, featuring Jack Pollo, known as one of the country's best all-around athletes.

Camera! also mentions Benny Goldstein going to cast for these pictures. That I did not mention to your reporter, also.

JACK POLLO.

Selig is to make "Ben Hur" Film rights are said to have cost $200,000. Casting is said to have begun.

Lew Cody finished a picture called "Don't Change Your Husband" last Saturday under direction of Cecil B. DeMille.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Reid gave their annual Thanksgiving dinner Thursday evening. Those gathered were Mr. and Mrs. Dick Rosson, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Macdonald, Lillian Walker, and Mrs. Alice Davenport.

A new motion picture organization has been formed which is to be known as the Assistant Directors' Association and a meeting is to be held December 2 at Brunton. 'Tis said Allen Watts is president.

Edna Purviance's automobile mowed down a telegraph pole at Third and Broadway after being struck by a street car. Miss Purviance rose from the ruins, boarded the car and arrived at the Chaplin studio on time. This is not a press agent story. It is a miracle.

A Greater Field

HERE are about 15,000 active picture theaters in the United States. But there are more than 600,000 churches, schools, clubs and lodges combined, the most of which are operating or will operate, projecting machines.

If the future holds cheer for the thousand and one scattered writers, who desire to make the old bank account groan by the addition of scenario checks, it is concealed in this non-theatrical field, as yet undeveloped in large measure, but so full of promise that it soon will prove one of the greatest film markets in the world.

Church and educational institutions are taking active steps to organize this market, a big task but one which surely must be accomplished by the powerful interests now behind it.

And when a half million new exhibitors are added to the present supply, what is now known as a "gigantic production" will fade into insignificance.

For the purpose of argument, should this great, new patronage only arrange for monthly exhibitions, the demand for stories and productions would still be so great as to provide an outlet for every good scenario written by the competents.

A mistaken idea exists among readers, as to the type of stories demanded by church, school and community. At present the so-called film trust will not allow any of its productions to be shown by non-theatrical places. Therefore church, lodge and community are combining to help themselves by securing their own producing centers, or at least, independent producers who will film pictures solely for that market.

In a general sense, this demand is not for strictly scriptural pictures for the churches, nor is it for strictly educational productions for the schools.

These organizations are looking for good, clean entertainment pictures, one and all. True, some scriptural productions naturally will be made, and some of the productions may bring education of a sort to community and school through the vision.

But, being true that all people are humans, and that humans demand to be entertained when going to an entertainment, wiseacres of the churches are going to give them genuine "movies."

It is difficult to believe that screen sermons, as such, would fill church auditoriums at so much per seat. The young people probably would be found down street, in a picture theater.

Should little Willie be told to cease torturing the cat, wash his face and accompany his parents to the school or community hall where the projecting machine would delight his little soul by revealing the inward secrets of geography, arithmetic, history, etc., etc., we fear that the ensuing howl would startle the natives and bring out the fire department.

No; little Willie, or any of his ilk would thrill with joy over such a program and no one knows it better than the men and women who are planning to entertain the young as well as the old through medium of the film tale.

Therefore writers who can manage to stagger through an original story without demilling, or vamping, or sexing, or manslaughtering it to death, may cheer up and expect a new market which may absorb his best effort.

Therefore, after giving three cheers for the sturdy independents in our midst, the "gang" might add a few more for the non-theatrical market, now under development by organizations with many millions behind them

The Waste Basket

It has been proven that not one person in a thousand who reads fiction notes the author's name, and a slightly better percent remember the titles of the stories. These statistics apply to the reading class, not the many who infrequently peruse stories. Yet the studios are using published fiction stories in preference to better original stories upon the excuse of "advertising value." Will someone kindly inform us wherein the alleged advertising value lays?

"I don't understand how that production flivvered," murmured the dazed producer. "It had a sheik in it, the leading lady wore less clothes than ever, and a director-general put it on. Must have been the prop's fault."

If censors and the self-appointed up-lifters would direct their attacks upon the personnel of those producers and directors who persist in offending with obnoxious pictures, some real good might come from the campaign. As in the case of many organizations, the very few prove the punk-sticks for the entire profession.

It is time that fiction editors pay a little more attention to the underlying plots of their published stories, and less to skilful vertiage and humorous style. The screen seldom carries as few values in a single production as the so-called short story of the magazine. To transpose to fiction a real meaty photoplay, would be to supply a serial or book under usual methods of stringing out episodes into torrents of words. When the short story meets the demands of the film feature, episode for episode, producers will have much better excuse for using the printed word, although logic and true psychology would have to be doctored considerably.

Well, well! Grandmother's favorite reading is running the period and costume play quite a race upon the screen. As few of us wrote either early century tales or before-the-war stories, we are in hard luck indeed. However, we all can write the story of today for the 1950 market, thus leaving a legacy to posterity. Cheering, eh?

"We stand back of every bed we make," says a sign in the window of a Los Angeles furniture store. Now the movie-mucker magazines can write some more jokes.

The free-lancers seem to be on the war-path. Many are writing in, eagerly asking for any further information upon the subject of organization, recently suggested by a reader. Sampsons have arisen from less incipient revolutions than this one seems to be. Perhaps there is a modern Moses among the rebels. If so, more power to his arm.

A near-sighted scenario writer entered a bank. Upon recognizing his surroundings, he went right out again to the cafeteria next door.

Overheard

Camera!'s campaign against the fake movie schools, that formerly advertised extensively in classified want ad sections of Los Angeles newspapers, affected one of the established producers in an amusing manner.

Officials of this studio decided to recruit new feminine faces for the screen by means of a "blind" want ad, to avoid applicants in person. The veteran press agent of the studio tendered the ad at the Examiner office.

The ad stated that an established film producer sought new faces, and requested letter and photograph sent to a box number. "This is no acting or make-up school," the ad specified.

"We can't take this for the help wanted columns," said the clerk. "We're fighting these fellows. We list them as employment agencies, and we've raised the rate to $1.25 a line—but they still seem to pay it."

The press agent explained that he represented one of the oldest and largest of producing companies. The clerk referred him to the classified manager. Finally, after much explanation, that official said he would "think it over" and decide whether the ad could be run or not. In disgust the film company decided to recruit new faces in some other manner.

Fox is planning to produce the stage comedy "Six Cylinder Love" and trying to borrow Neely Edwards from Universal for the lead.

Al Green is taking Thomas Meighan to South America for his next production.

THE LITTLE BIRD

KIESLING TO MARRY

Barrett Kiesling of the Lasky publicity department, treasurer of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers, is scheduled to marry Lillian Windley, a non-professional, next Thursday. Miss Windley is the niece of G. Spencer Shimmis, secretary-treasurer of the Troy Laundry company.

Exhausts

From Al Martin

Bert Lytell had to bleach his hair for "The Rupert of Hentzau," which proves that all is fair in love and motion pictures.

Frederick Kohler, playing the heavy in "The Smoke Eater," was overcome by smoke. Lucky, Fred, you weren't doing "The Poison Eater."

Stuart Paton recently had his hair cut. Reason unknown.

If the speed laws aren't changed soon we'll have to shoot our pictures in jail.

Neely Edwards has turned over a new leaf, so to speak. He turned his Paige in for a Rickenbacker coupe.

Many of the cast of Sidney Franklin's production have doubled in "Brass."

Al Santel and his entire company tried to catch a runaway monkey on Sunset boulevard. In their confusion it became a battle royal.

Rollin Sturgeon finished "What's Your Daughter Doing," at Universal. You ought to know, Rollin, it's your picture.

Charlie the elephant got temperamental and tore a shed at the "U." Well, elephant does an elephant sees.

Cecil B. DeMille adopted a baby girl that was left in an automobile. You're lucky, C. B. I left my car out and all I got was a ticket.

It is reported that Lasky is scrapping Arbuckle's unreleased films. It is also reported that the United States is scrapping the navy.

HANDLING DUMBBELLS OR THROWING THE ———?

Arthur Leslie, film press agent, established a new world record for a man of his years by lifting 600 pounds at the physical culture show in New York.

We can almost guess how he trained for the stunt.

Physical Culture magazine has sixteen photographs of Leslie performing his feats.

That magazine could get some startling pictorial stuff by trailing Harry Wilson, Mike Boylan, Roy Miller, Arch Reeve around newspaper offices with a graflex camera.

The P. A.'s Friends

Katherine B. Spear is doing movies, music and general assignments for the St. Paul (Minn.) Daily News. She was formerly on the society department of the Duluth News-Tribune.

It's now the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald. William Randolph Hearst purchased the Washington Herald, and will issue it from the office of his afternoon paper, the Times.

The Huntsville (Ala.) Times has purchased the circulation of the Huntsville Telegram, who publisher is in bankruptcy.

Leo V. Smith is acting as dramatic editor of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal until the return of Franklin H. Chase, now touring the world.

"THIRTY" FOR NEWSMAN

Charles E. Hughes, former representative in Los Angeles of the International News Service, died last week in Prescott, Arizona, after an illness of eight months. Hughes was in his journalistic practice a staunch friend of motion picture people. In articles, carried all over the country by the International service, Hughes recorded the fight against censorship two years ago in the most sympathetic manner.

Why not a Little Picture movement?

THIS is addressed to those conscientious objectors to motion pictures who flock to the theater en masse should a title savor of the suggestive, and whose leisure time is devoted to writing scathing letters and articles or to making scalding comments from club platform or pulpit.

Dear Folks:

If motion pictures as they are being produced and exhibited do not meet with your approval (and of the most enthusiastic of us, who does approve of everything?) why not do your bit?

If you have worthy ideas, use them in making pictures.

Experiment. Find out where you are wrong—or maybe wake up the world! The field is clear for you.

Persons with ideas are valuable to motion pictures. We want you and them.

Organize a Little Picture movement in your community.

Take some of the funds that are squandered on expensive bridge parties and the dansants. Instead of paying princely fees to a long-haired mystic holding the torch of a new aestheticism, invite some practical film men and women to talk to you. Engage studio space and a working staff. Use professionals or your fellows. Work out your own ideas, learn what the producer with artistic ideals is up against—and if you can do the things he can't, do them.

* * *

We acknowledge thanks to the New York Telegraph for the suggestion:

Is a little theater movement to flourish among the motion picture fans?

Broadway is being convulsed by "The Torch-Bearers," a play for and about those who have been trying to uplift the drama these many years. And, simultaneously, Ben Turpin is bowling over lovers of comedy with one of the best films he ever made—"Home-Made Movies." A Johnny Jones comedy recently released and called "Making Movies" is very similar.

With all of this talk about what's wrong with the motion pictures, it is surprising that some of our progressive society and club women have not started out in dead earnest to reform the films by making and acting in them themselves. Would it not be a splendid opportunity for idle women killing time who really feel that they have a mission in art? It will probably be much easier to photograph film drama in the home than it has been to stage Ibsen and Tolstoy at the Century club rooms. Especially in the small towns should the home-made movie have a wide popularity. Potential Mary Pickfords and Nazimovas, who would never have a bona-fide screen debut, can make their own opportunities in the home-made scenario. Resultant close-ups might be more awful in their effect than some of the manifestations of the Little Theater movement described in "The Torch-Bearers."

Interesting statistics might be gathered, too, about what sort of motion pictures the public really wants. Would the eternal triangle be eliminated? Would every leading man be expected to act like Rodolph Valentino? What actresses would be copied most often? Here is an excellent way of finding out just what is wrong with the motion pictures. Let the public work it out themselves.

* * *

Sees the light

Dr. G. A. Briegleb, pastor of the Westlake Presbyterian church, will not carry out his proposed plan to head the Lord's Day Alliance in a great movement favoring blue laws, with censorship as one of the main objects.

We believe that Dr. Briegleb, like many other good but mistaken persons, has seen the light.

Therefore he will remain in his pulpit and attend faithfully, we believe, upon the spiritual welfare of his flock.

When Dr. Briegleb entered the limelight at the national conference of his church by denouncing motion pictures almost as a whole, his knowledge was somewhat limited as to motion pictures. Since that time he has been fair enough to study the subject at close range, and to discuss pictures with film men of equal wisdom.

As a result, we believe that the good doctor has discovered that he had seen too much evil in places where it did not exist and, incidentally, was gratified to find that the industry itself was doing its own uplift work in a manner which should be entirely satisfactory to all fair-minded men of the gospel.

If it be true that Dr. Briegleb has discovered that he had done many good people injustice in his first attacks, and that he is more needed in his pulpit than in the field of over-ultraism, we are genuinely happy of the fact and would not ascribe any other motive to his change of heart.

Film Capital Production Notes

Starting

"Her Fatal Millions," starring Viola Dana under direction of William Beaudine at Metro.

Hugh Deirker, on a series of dramatic stories with an all-star cast, at Fine Arts. Charles Stumar, cameraman, and J. Farrel McDonald assistant director. American release.

Frankie Lee in "Last Night When You Kissed Blanche Thompson," by Bess Aldrich at Federal. Clarence Bricker, director.

Neal Hart, on five-reel features, for the Wm. Steiner productions at Universal.

ANIMAL PRODUCTIONS SCHEDULED

William Campbell, director and producer of animal pictures, has been engaged by Universal City to direct a series of condensed features in which animals will play the leading roles. Napoleon, an educated chimpanzee, Charlie, the elephant, dogs, cats, beasts and birds will be seen in humorous and romantic attitudes. Harry Burns, previously associated with Mr. Campbell, will co-direct the series.

Dorothy Dalton will shortly start work under the direction of Victor Fleming in "The Law of the Lawless," a Paramount picture, written by Konrad Bercovici and adapted by E. Lloyd Sheldon. Charles de Roche, French actor, is to play the male lead.

Complete

"The Flower Girl," Baby Peggy's current production, has been finished. It is now being titled by Bob Hopkins.

"Detective K-Nine" has been finished by Harry Edwards, Century director.

"Alice Adams," starring Florence Vidor, has been completed, and is being titled.

"The Social Buccaneer," a new Universal serial, has been completed. Robert Hill directed and Jack Mulhall was the star. Margaret Livingston appeared as leading lady.

Monte Banks has completed his twentieth comedy for Federated. The title is "Four O'Clock in the Morning."

Rowland V. Lee has finished cutting and titling of his production of Tarkington's Pulitzer prize novel, "Alice Adams," starring Florence Vidor.

Roy Stone is completing the cutting of "A Man of Action," a novel mystery comedy directed by James Horne from an original story by Bradley King. Douglas MacLean, Marguerite de La Motte and Raymond Hatton head the cast.

One single idea may have greater weight than the labor of all the men, animals and engines of a century.—(Emerson).

By Warner Brothers to "Babbit," by Sinclair Lewis, author "Main Street."

By Warner to "Irene," popular Broadway success, to be produced next year.

Rupert Julian, director of "Merry Go Round," is seeking to purchase the celebrated English stage success, "Peg Woffington," as a vehicle to follow the present picture. "Peg Woffington" is a story of an English actress, famous in British history.

JACK LONDON'S STORY SECURED

All motion picture rights to Jack London's great dog story, "The Call of the Wild," were purchased by Hal E. Roach after several months of negotiations.

The director, Fred Jackman, with a full company, and the wonder dog, "Bunk," was already on location in Yellowstone Park when he was advised that Mrs. London had consented to the screening of Jack London's classic. The director immediately started shooting. Several months will be spent in the filming.

Continuity By—

George H. Plympton, late of Universal, for the Richard Talmadge production, "The Smoke Eater."

Florence Hein for "Refuge," an original story by Lois Zellner in which Katherine MacDonald is starring under Victor Schertzinger's direction.

Title Changes

"The Bitterness of Sweets," a Rupert Hughes-Goldwyn production to "Look Your Best."

G. M. Anderson, producer of "Mud and Sand," will next make a burlesque, "When Knighthood was in Flour." Stan Laurel is the star.

Arthur Maude, actor, director, and author is to produce a series of twelve two-reel pictures written from famous masterpieces of paintings. Mr. Maude wrote, "The Beggar Maid," and "The Bashful Suitor," which brought fame to Mary Astor. He will also direct the new series which includes, "The Angelus," "The Doctor," "Speak! Speak!" and other famous paintings.

"The Law-Bringers," a novel by G. B. Lancaster, has been selected for production as Reginald Barker's second all-star special for Louis B. Mayer instead of the Blanche Upright story, "The Valley of Content," as originally planned. The Barker company will embark for the North very soon in order to reach the old Yukon Trail country before the cold and snow make production operations impossible.

EARLE TO DIRECT THEDA

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—Ferdinand Earle will direct Theda Bara in "The Easiest Way" for Selznick. Production will start as soon as the script is completed. The picture will be an art super-feature.

Earle arrived here a few weeks ago with the key print of "The Rubaiyat," cut the negative of the picture that has been two years in production and turned it over for release. Hodkinson is slated to handle it.

Earle's contract with David O. Selznick to picture Eugene Walter's melodrama, with strong emphasis on pictorial beauty, will not interfere with his personal production of "Faust." Earle's elaborate preparations for this art production are nearing completion at his studio workshop in Hollywood under direction of Paul Detlefsen, who will head Earle's western unit.

HOPPER THROUGH

E. Mason Hopper's contract with Goldwyn expired Monday. Hopper is the last of the original Goldwyn directors, who included Reginald Barker, Frank Lloyd, Clarence Badger, Victor Schertzinger, Mason Litson and Wallace Worsley.

PREVIEW MAKE-UP-LESS PICTURE

"Tansy," said to be the first picture with players who used no make-up, was previewed at the Ambassador theater last night. It is a Burr Nickle Production starring Alma Taylor.

Vincent Coleman, screen juvenile, was married in Chicago to Marjorie Grant, a featured dancer in "The Perfect Fool." Mr. Coleman has closed his stage engagement and will again devote his attention to the screen.

On her return from Paris, Andree Peyro, Pathe player and aviatrix, brings news of motion picture conditions in France:

The burden of taxes imposed on motion picture theaters has become so heavy that French exhibitors state they will close down their houses if the taxation continues. Such a move will not immediately affect American motion pictures as films reaching the French market are generally sold outright to foreign distributors who will suffer any loss. The Gaumont organization in Paris is said to be mapping out an extensive production program with the idea of invading the American market.

ARREST FILM PROMOTER

Norman E. Cameron, president of the Educational Film corporation of Missouri, was arrested this week in Kansas City on a warrant signed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county. He is charged with embezzling $15,000 in violation of California blue sky laws. Cameron has been sought since April.
